Improving
Little
Decisions
from Priority, Reality, Purpose and Practice

DEEPAK RAM

Contents

PREFACE ..... 3
INTRODUCTION: ..... 6
Little decisions: ..... 7
Organization of the book ..... 13
SECTION I - THE PRIORITY ..... 15
Intensity of perception: ..... 25
Relativity in psychology: ..... 26
Summary of the section: ..... 28
SECTION II - REALITY ..... 30
Nature of the universe: ..... 30
The nature of flora and fauna: ..... 35
Possessiveness of real estate: ..... 37
Implications on society of knowing the truth: ..... 39
Way forward for a reader, after knowing the truth: ..... 40
Nature of the mind and higher purposes: ..... 41
Decoupling of external and internal worlds: ..... 45
Summary of the section: ..... 48
SECTION III - PURPOSE ..... 50
Review of objectives in life: ..... 50
Main realizations in philosophy: ..... 53
Achieving psychological objectives: ..... 58
Self-identification, purpose and positioning ..... 60
Summary of this section: ..... 63
SECTION IV - PRACTICE ..... 64

Plan for practice of mental inputs: ..... 65
Mental Inputs:..... 68
Summary of this section: ..... 78
CONCLUSION..... 81
APPENDIX I ..... 85
Desires..... 85
Fears..... 88
Ego..... 89
Happiness, love and bliss ..... 90
Self-worth and confidence..... 95
Intelligence..... 97
Expectations and fruits of action ..... 101
Challenges and Misfortunes ..... 104
PERSONAL BIO..... 107

PREFACE

In the era of AI, all the major decisions can be taken by using AI. However, AI can't help us in keeping ourself peaceful in stressful situations. We are stressed in many situations because we unconsciously decide to be stressful, based on the importance we give to various aspects of life. Our understanding of priorities in life, the nature of the universe and our purpose in life shapes up our lives in terms of the small decisions that we take during our perceptions.

The most important aspect of this book is that it unravels the undiscovered enigma of the cryptic nature of our universe, like never before. The realization of the nature of the life, will help us to look at it with less seriousness, thereby our problems will appear less serious and thereby they become mentally more manageable and less stressful. Furthermore, this book details about what our priorities and purpose should be based on the realities of life and how to practice mental inputs to improve our psychological status and decision-making ability.

This book also talks about the nature of the subconscious mind and how mindfully applying the right conscious inputs to it will improve the small decisions.

Another thing that this book teaches us, is that there is place for happening of negative aspects in this world at the proportion at which it is happening, as they are needed for their requirement for the necessary stories in life and the seriousness, the higher powers want us to have. Therefore, we need to have some level of acceptance of all situations and some level of expectance of all types of situations in our life.

This book shows that the psychological contentment that we get from succeeding in external achievements, can be got from direct psychological means of mental inputs. Therefore, we can conclude that, this book provides a way for everyone to be contended by his or her life, irrespective of their life situation by helping us to improve our little decisions that shape up our lives.

The best way to go about with this book is to get hold of it in our forties, so that we have enough things to look back upon and reflect on the stories that our life has brought about after the great transformation. Moreover, we will appreciate peace only if we have experienced chaos before.

Two more interesting topics in the book are, relativity in psychology and decoupling external and internal worlds.

Hope this book enables everyone to have a better consciousness of bliss and at the end a realisation of a satisfying journey of life.

My final statement would be that sky is not the limit for psychological improvements and we have only started to look at the tip of the iceberg and not reached the depth anywhere close to a start of what it may look like in future.

INTRODUCTION:

From the human perspective, there are three broad aspects to look for in life. The first one is the Knowledge. The second one is the relative importance of different aspects of Knowledge. The third one is our objectives in life based on our knowledge and the relative importance of different aspects of the knowledge. In this book, I call the objectives as our purpose, the knowledge as the reality and relative importance of different aspects of knowledge as the priority. The most important aspect that affects our life is our decisions. In this context, we are only referring to the knowledge and priority of knowledge that pertains to our decisions. Even small choices that we make about accepting our thoughts and feelings are the important decisions, that have major impact on our lives. Our decisions are based on our relative priorities of major aspects of life, our purpose or belief in our objectives in life and the level of seriousness in life. The purpose and seriousness in life change when we realize the actual nature of our existence. To maintain right priorities, we need to practice mental inputs by regular affirmations of related truths. Hence the name of the book is 'Improving Little Decisions, from Priority, Reality, Purpose & Practice'. The reality helps in learning to perceive with the right intensity. The priority helps in making little decisions involving various aspects of life. The purpose helps in making little decisions when there are no issues involved. Practice helps in getting there.

Little decisions:

The only important things in your life are your decisions. We take care of the so-called important decisions that help us get through with our daily routine and major needs. However, the little decisions that we take throughout the day about how to perceive our thoughts and feelings are more important to keep us happy. Every moment of unpleasantness can be attributed to incorrect decisions. The incorrect decisions prop up from incorrect priorities in life. For example, if we have great priority to get rich, any loss of revenue would lead us to great disappointment. Therefore, to compensate we need to have priority for acceptance and expectance of loses, peace, feeling good, belief in the story of losing by some and gaining by some, not getting personal, temporary life, illusionary life etc. Once we have control over our thoughts by improving our priorities, we can just decide to be satisfied at all moments, irrespective of our external situations. Even a small feeling for example of getting bored is a result of our decision that we got bored. If we do not make that decision the feeling will die down. Our decisions add fuel to the feelings and keep them alive. Therefore, we should be mindful of the numerous small decisions that we make and spend effort to correct them.

Question may arise that if we do not have desires to be rich, how will be motivated to achieve. However, we should not depend on our desires and fears for our motivation. Although desires and fears help in motivation, they create many side effects, which affect our peace and intelligence. When we have strong desire or fear any setback will lead to lot of unhappiness. Moreover, our desires and fears make us not reckon many small aspects in life which put together lead to incorrect decisions. Therefore, we should keep our desires and fears to the minimum. To increase motivation, we need to increase importance of those aspects in our life which helps us to create a drive in achieving our objectives. For example, we should give more importance to our daily routine, optimum utilization of time and other resources, learnings, process improvements, sharpening our skills, application of basics, etc.

It is the numerous small decisions, which we have to learn to master because we can make use of AI to help us with the major ones. The numerous small decisions that we take while perceiving our thoughts and feelings, that arise from our surroundings, affect our happiness and peace more than anything else. These are more difficult as lots of mental control is needed to get our small decisions correctly. Most of our uneasiness can be traced from our giving too much importance to the end results and not anticipating negative results. When we give importance to the end results, very often we do not decide to our advantage. For example, our outbursts in anger or depression from circumstances. Our desires and fears make us never satisfied if we do not stop giving importance to the end results.

Recognizing many aspects while deciding about our thoughts about an issue like, having noble intentions, process improvements, imperfect characters around, higher plans, negative possibilities, insignificant world, temporary world, temporary life, delusional ego, mindset dependability on things like health, wealth and success, etc., instead of only about the end results, help us to keep small decisions under control. Our small decisions go haywire only when we perceive things with high intensity. Only when we learn to perceive everything with low intensity, we will be able to control our thoughts. Another thing that we must practice is to perceive or decide for our advantage. For example, if we perceive negative things negatively, we will feel negative whereas if we perceive negative things positively, we will feel positive about negative things. For this we should look for positive aspects in even negative aspects, downplay the negativity and accept the need for some negativity. Our net perception in intensity should be just enough to respond based on the leverage that we have. We may just write down our views so that the higher powers may consider that based on our visibility.

To be accurate we need to consider many aspects related to our decisions to the extent that they become exhaustive. For example, we need to give consideration for freedom, security, peace, happiness, growth, friendship, higher support, long term impact, side effects, opportunity costs, difficulties ahead, alternative solutions, general impression, cost of inaction, relevance over time, environmental issues and many other similar aspects. We have to then give right weightage to all the aspects. We have to then train our minds to have it updated with the right priorities because if we had the habit of taking incorrect decisions, we need to spend time in updating our mind with repeated self-affirmations. Moreover, we need to expect and accept side effects of our decisions before they are taken. Continuous improvements by expecting and anticipating better ways is the way to go forward. Right balance between our self-narratives based on proper research and self-inquiry to pull better ideas will ensure the continuous improvements. Sometimes writing down the basic ideas will help reinforce changes we are looking forward.

The attention that we give during our various points of time affect our decisions. More the time spent on pleasures and luxury seeking the lesser the growth in intelligence. More the time spent on self-improvements, the more the growth in intelligence.

The right mix of learning, execution and fun is essential for healthy balance.

We should always consider, what if I am wrong and how it could be wrong, before deciding on important issues.

Organization of the book

The book has four sections. The first section deals with the relative priorities of important aspects of life. Here, we look at aspects for which we have more control and aspects that really matter to us. In second section we will understand the reality of our existence. After knowing about the reality, we will realize that we need to take ourselves and the world less seriously. In the third section we examine our purpose in life. After understanding this section, the priority and the reality, we will realize that psychological self-actualization is the highest goal to achieve, rather than wealth or power. The last section is dedicated to the practicing of mental inputs to help us improve our decisions. This section has numerous self-affirmations, which will help us to practice mental inputs to achieve our real purpose in life. This is followed by a conclusion, which has meaningful takeaways. This book also has an appendix, in which major psychological aspects like desire, fear, ego, intelligence etc. are explained. The final section is a personal biodata of the author.

SECTION I - THE PRIORITY

We worry a lot when we think about job insecurity, failing in college, losing in stock market, insecurity in relationship, health issues, loss in business, overspending in budget, toxic boss, tiresome job etc. However, our worries do not help in our situations. Moreover, our mental situation deteriorates and we become sad and less intelligent. Therefore, we have to primarily stop worrying in these situations. We worry during the above situations because we have given too much importance to those situations, to the extent that our mind considers them as great threats and overlooks our need for happiness and peace. Therefore, we need to downplay those situations and prioritize happiness and peace, in order to stop worrying in those situations. A more organized way to deal with this is to have a comprehensive list of priorities with right weightage for important aspects of life.

Following are the relative importance I assigned to important aspects of life in the scale of 1 to 4000. This is listed by giving more importance to aspects for which we can have more control and to aspects which are difficult to face. When we sort out the relative importance of these, it will become easy to make decisions in life. Understanding these priorities not only help to take actions but most importantly help out with our perceptions, thinking, feelings and psychological status. The number assigned next to the aspect, which is 1 through 4000 is the weightage for the priority for the aspect. The characterization is divided into aspects for which we have full control, aspects for which we have no control and aspects for which we have less control. most important aspects appear first in the list. Explanation about where to focus for maximum purpose is given after the list. At the end of this, explanation of why and how much the individual aspect is important is provided for further clarifications.

Priority of major aspects (1-4000)

ASPECTS FOR WHICH WE HAVE FULL CONTROL
Achieving Self-actualization (psychologically) 3000 Developing Logical intelligence 1000
Developing Mental health 1000
Responsibility (family & society) 1000
Physical health 1000
Monthly budget 1000
Daily routine 1000
Knowledge 1000
Social Consciousness 1000
[11000;44%]

ASPECTS FOR WHICH DEPEND ON LUCK
Freedom from extreme pain 4000
Freedom to think and act 3000
Survival 1000
[8000;32%]

ASPECTS FOR WHICH WE HAVE LESS CONTROL
Relationship 1000
Success 1000
Children success 1000
Wealth 1000
Power, recognition 1000
Comforts, recreation and time pass 1000
Daily end results 900
Pleasures 100
[7000;24%]

It can be seen from the above that we give more importance to aspects that are really less important and for which we have less control than aspects which are more important and which have more control. If we could achieve the aspects for which we have full control and are fortunate enough to have aspects depending fully on luck we can achieve 76% of our goals. We unnecessarily chase things which depend on many factors and also give undue importance to them. This makes us stressful and often unhappy. Given below are a brief explanation of the various aspects.

Freedom from extreme pain

This is freedom from worst case scenario. Although we have little control on these, we need to reckon what is our greatest and only vulnerability. We unnecessarily worry for other things and not be grateful for freedom from this possibility. If we have this freedom, we can safely consider oneself not hopeless or the worst situation and be grateful in life.

Freedom to think and act

This is very important. We cannot be called a human being if we do not have freedom to think. When we give too much importance to end results, we do not have the freedom or time to think freely. Freedom to act is basically the freedom to choose our daily routine. Even if we do not have external pressure, our own desires and fears rob us from the real delight of stressless thinking and acting.

Self-actualization

If we have achieved self-actualization, then only lack of freedom and extreme pain can affect us. In the normal conditions we would have nothing more to achieve.

Logical intelligence

If we have a good mental health coupled with sound logical intelligence, we can improve our life condition. Being happy and contended is not good enough. We have to strive for excellence. If we have logical intelligence we will strive for great things in life. Emotional intelligence is also logical in nature, but just not developed before due to preoccupation with our daily life. I am able to write this book because I have developed logical intelligence. Good mental health is a prerequisite for developing sound logical intelligence. Practicing psychological techniques helps in gaining logical intelligence. Applying logical intelligence to various life situations get us to the status of psychological greatness of self-actualization.

Mental health

Internally our mental health is the most important in life. Mental health comprises various aspects like freedom, peace, contentment, anger, disappointments, envy, guilt, depression, happiness, joy etc. Since our mental health is very high on priority, having freedom, peace, contentment and happiness should be very high on the priority list. Similarly, not having anger, disappointments, envy, guilt and depression should be high on the priority list. Our responsibilities and physical health suffer when the emotions are not in control.

Responsibility (family & society)

Personal mental health more important than responsibility. Responsibility more important than physical health.

Physical health

This is the trickiest one. There are many of us having various degrees of health issues. If we neglect the issues, they will worsen and if we give too much importance to them, we will start getting mental problems and then we can’t carry out our responsibilities properly.

Monthly budget

We get overly worried about our financial security only because we do not have trust in ourselves and the higher powers. Maintenance of monthly budget is mostly the need for our higher powers for sustenance. Our physical health is more important than monthly budget. Our daily routine is affected if monthly budget is affected. If we are sure to pull on for four or five months, we should not worry too much about monthly budget. We need to upgrade our knowledge and skills and look out for opportunities.

Daily routine

Externally very important for maintenance. This includes our jobs, hobbies, exercises and meetings.

Knowledge

Health, responsibility, daily routine, intelligence is more important than knowledge. Knowledge is more important than wealth, power, recognition, comforts, success and pleasures. Without proper knowledge we will lose everything. Therefore, we should daily spend few hours in improving our knowledge in all areas, including knowledge to develop intelligence.

Politics and sport

Some participation is needed to ensure good governance and liveliness. We should not be too attached to the extent that they affect our peace.

Wealth, power, recognition

Having a clear mind is more important than the comforts. These are dependent on mindsets and are often delusional.

Comforts, recreation and time pass

Having a clear mind is more important than the comforts. These are dependent on mindsets and are often delusional.

Dynamics of interactions.

These are temporary ups and downs which should be downplayed upon to avoid mood swings.

Success (Personal & Family)

Our idea of success depends on our mindsets. Equality is more real than success.

Pleasures

Although pleasures provide ecstasy, they are short lived and have many side effects. Therefore, we should have proper plan for them to ensure they do not cause harm.

End results

The end results depend on many factors and attachments to outcomes makes our mind wavering.

Survival

If we are happy in this world, it is only a delusion because it is our illusionary ego, which makes us think great, whereas there is nothing personal about us when we consider the nature of our life. Moreover, this life is a kind of bondage, in the sense most things happen without our control. Therefore, we should somewhat take the good things in life and not worry about diseases and death. We should accept these as natural phenomena by mental simulations. We panic only when we are not prepared. If we decide these are good then, we will feel comfortable through them.

Intensity of perception:

If, for example, our mind always evaluates the relative priorities in the range of 1 to 100 and we have perceived an overwhelming event at the level of 100, our mind ignores all other relevant aspects before deciding. On the contrary if we perceive the same event at the level of 5, some twenty related aspects we be compared during the decision and the option matching the resultant of the priorities will be suggested as the right option to choose. Moreover, the mental bandwidth will be less busy when things as perceived with less intensity. The moment we spoke or hear with high intensity, the flexibility is lost and incorrect options will be starting to come.

Only downside to perceiving with less intensity is that we will start forgetting the events quickly. Probable, we need to write down important event with a scheduler.

Relativity in psychology:

Applying relativity is psychology helps in reducing our intensity of perceptions. When we decide everything with right priorities for major aspects of life, our psychological status keeps improving. To apply this concept, we have to take the position of ourselves as our individual will, as compared to our body. In this process we just reckon the implications of psychologically perceiving one thing as more important than the another. For example, if end results are perceived as more important than my current psychological status than I become psychologically less important compared to the end results and all people I perceive that do not care for the same end results. In other words, if end results do not matter at all to me, then I am psychologically superior to my perception of the end results. If my health is more important to me than my current status, then I become less important psychologically than my body. If I worry about an aspect then my psychological status is less than my perception of that aspect. The same cannot be said for mental health because comparison with most things will become meaningless if we are mentally insane. When some aspects become less important compared to my current status, I do not worry about them. We can use similar analogies to downplay the major aspects in life to start perceiving them with lower intensity. Good psychological status does not mean feeling high of oneself. It also indicates more flexibility and less ego. The psychological status built on good logic is supreme.

The relativity in psychology also helps in shaping our decisions. For example, if a soldier has a higher level of perception for loyalty to the country than his responsibility for his family, he will be able to decide to go on war peacefully, provided he has high psychological status.

Finally, we also need to compare ourselves with the reality to achieve necessary humbleness.

Summary of the section:

To summarize, we often go all out or worry about financial aspects and overlook many areas where we can improve to make our lives better in terms of mental satisfaction. Making small decisions correctly about how we perceive our current thoughts, feelings and senses will help us achieve maximum number of good moments in our lives. To achieve this, we need to have right priorities for important aspects of life. In other words, we need to prioritize good moments now rather than achieve something which may give good moments in the future. However, we need to keep in mind the importance of our daily routine to achieve a minimum level of external actions needed for a healthy maintenance of mind, body and family requirements. The bottom line is that having right priorities helps in making little decisions that involve two or more related aspects. For everything we perceive, there is a concept of relative psychology working in our mind. For example, how we perceive ourselves psychologically, compared to the issue we are trying to solve. If the issue we are trying to solve is perceived as less compared to how we perceive ourselves psychologically, then we will not worry about the results and we will be able to face the issue at ease. Therefore, we should downplay all our worries and perceive everything with less importance.

SECTION II - REALITY

The reality includes, the nature of the universe, nature of mind and higher purposes of our creators.

Nature of the universe:

This universe like any complex, vast and workable system has to be thoroughly tested. If thoughts and feelings of a creature have to be tested, the tester has to become the creature to test it. However, to change forms as per wish to test a creature is only possible if the nature of the tester is a formless one. Moreover, the form that we see must have been first designed by a formless entity, because the question about who designed the first form becomes meaningless, if it was a form that developed it. However, there can't be more than one type of dynamic entity forming the universe, because seamless integration of more than one type of dynamic entity without any disorder any time is not possible. If there is a single formless entity it must cover the entire expanse or the whole universe due to the reason that it has to be in equilibrium. This means there was no place for anything else other than the single formless entity, before any form could have been developed. Moreover, we are taking about existence, which must have always existed. Therefore, it can be concluded with certainty that this universe is a single, ubiquitous formless entity, which may be called, ‘The Being' or 'The Brahman'.

If we consider that the universe is a single formless entity covering the entire expanse, then it is obvious that it cannot move, because there is infinite length to move, requiring infinite force to do it. If we consider that 'The being' can’t move and the universe is expanding, planets and the stars are rotating and revolving, and objects and creatures are moving about, then we can conclude with certainty that the moving objects that we see are mere changes in visible patterns on the 'The being'. The fact that objects can be seen in the mirror when they are not in that position also suggests that our vision is the projection or a reflection on 'The being'. In other words, the matter that we see is just a surface visual property of 'the Being'. The movements of the stars and planets, along with their constituents are similar to in a sequential lighting system, where in a pattern of on and off creates the illusion of movement. Since 'the Being' cannot move, and the universe, which is a reflection of patterns, which constantly moves, we can conclude that when we feel a pain or pleasure, the sensitivities are actually experienced by different spots of 'The being', even if they are experienced constantly at one part of the body. In other words when we feel a pleasure or pain, the sensitivities have to keep moving to catch up with the movement of the universe in terms of rotation and revolution of earth and movements of our body. This is also similar to the sequential lighting system, in which the property of sensitivity for series of points in the Being undergoes on and off, in paths parallel to the on and off of visual patterns, such that the sensitivities appear to exist in the same area as the visual patterns. Since all the sensitivity and visual patterns move in the same speed, they appear to be at the same place as our eye and conscious mind are also part of the patterns. Only when there is a movement relative to our eyes, we will able to perceive them.

The sensitivity of pleasure or pain can also be considered as just a property in the space in between the atoms because there is no movement in the being and only the properties change by means of execution of codes representing patterns sent from somewhere else in 'the Being'. Obviously, some codes lead to change in visual effects and some codes lead to change in the sensitivities. Moreover, there are some strong indications that the universe is maintained by some sort of programming on 'the Being'. For example, the fact that light behaves like a particle or wave depending of whether it is observed or not clearly suggests that the travel of light happens by some sort of programming. Another fact that suggests that universe exists by programming is that quantum entanglements between particles at large distances at near instantaneous speeds is only possible by prior planning of execution of programs by numerous processors all over 'the Being', much earlier than when we do the experiment, that is when we decide to do it in our mind.

The above points conclude that our bodies are insentient, or without life and the pain and pleasure we experience are impersonal or coming from random spots of 'The being'.

A side effect of the above reality is that the part of 'The being' experiencing pleasure or pain now could be the same part of 'The being' that experienced pleasure or pain some time back for some other person or any other creature. This fact suggests oneness and equality among us in contrary to our mindsets, which always makes us to compare with others for our psychological contentment or elevation.

In conclusion, this universe and the lives of people and animals are illusions while in the reality there is only a uniform, ubiquitous life form, 'The Being'. The bigger illusion is that our bodies are insentient and the pain and pleasures that we experience are actually experienced by random spots of 'The being'.

The nature of flora and fauna:

We came to the understanding from the previous topic that this universe is a single ubiquitous formless entity. However, we know that some parts of it are conscious of shapes and sensitivities. Therefore, it is obvious that each unit of the being can be configured to be a consciousness, a colour or a sensitivity and there is a way to send patterns across to configure the different parts accordingly. In a uniform system there is no way the duality of observer and observed can be achieved unless there is some sort of individual configuration of being observer or observed. Therefore, we can say that each part of the existence can be in one of the three states. Plain existence which is more than 99.99 % of the total existence. Consciousness, which are parts of brain in animals, and is less than 0.0001% of the universe. Bliss, which is everything which is neither plain existence and not consciousness, is less than 0.001% of the total existence. All the colour, sound, taste, thoughts, feelings, pain, pleasure etc. are the bliss configuration of the existence. I am influenced by our Vedic description of the universe as existence, consciousness and bliss. If someone wants, he or she may name the bliss aspect as something else. So, primarily we are just existence, which is nothing but everything that takes up the space. When we die, we continue to exist, but are not configured to be conscious of the bliss configuration around a small area of body. While the universe is constantly expanding, the volume not reached yet is more than 99.99% of existence, which is just plain existence. The illusion, which is the universe or the configured existence is less than 0.001% of the total existence and the part that has consciousness is less than 0.0001 % of the illusion. The percentages are vague and only help us to understand the reality and how incorrect our perceptions really are compared to the reality. It is obvious that we are developed using configuration of patterns of shape, sensitivity or consciousness using coding patterns, similar to how we have developed a computer system. Looks like both the flora rand the fauna are nothing but consciousness of bliss, although the bliss aspect is less developed in case of the flora. Probably the flora can be just conscious of the weather and in very low intensity. Obviously, the bliss configuration of mankind is the most developed with intermittent tracks of consciousness of bliss patterns as thoughts.

Possessiveness of real estate:

When our creator creates an individual, it borrows some existence and configures as consciousness and bliss. Everything that we do, we do it for a consciousness of better bliss. The existence that we see are everybody's, but in our consciousness of bliss, the ones that is mentioned in the stamp paper gives us the bliss of ownership. But we can have an understanding that although each one has a private place allocated by the stamp paper, all the public places are jointly owned by everyone. We should give more importance to the huge joint area, with is million times larger than anyone's private area. If we firmly believe this understanding and internalize by repetitions than we will have better consciousness of bliss without lots of overhead costs in terms of time, effort, energy and costs. The stamp paper system has a major limitation that there is no provision for ownership for our creator. I am sure our creators have the consciousness of bliss of ownership of everything. Therefore, relying on the stamp paper cannot be considered as the best way to have better consciousness of bliss in ownership. However, to maintain a story in the planet, the system serves a purpose. Moreover, you don't want someone to barge in to your private place. Baring for the above two purposes, we should give more importance to the common vast area and reckon joint ownership of it. Your private place could be just the cabin allotted to you and all the other areas are meeting places and lounges. This way some sort of equality is maintained and everyone can have a good consciousness of bliss.

Implications on society of knowing the truth:

Here, more than the end results of knowing the truth, the pace of change in storylines are important. One important aspect to consider here is the genuineness of work that we do. Moreover, the right priorities for different aspects of life during this time is more important than the absolute truth, and hence the former should be considered for making decisions regarding the pace of the realization of truth among the public. This is similar to AI disrupting jobs. We lose the story and the genuineness, when we consider only the end results. I am sure the higher powers will ensure that things change at the right pace. Apart from genuineness some level of seriousness from our part is also needed to keep the life moving. When the realizations are at the right place and pace, it will ensure that we all will be working at different layers of reality, similar to software networking. Business will be working in the application layer. Scientists will be working in the physical layer. Our creators will be working in the layer of the source, the Being or the Brahman. Spiritualists like me will try to understand the concepts that are created by our creators. This sits between the physical layer and the creation layer. The deepest layer is the being or the Brahman layer, to which only our creators have some access and have a substantial handle to change configuration of colour, sensitivities and consciousness.

Way forward for a reader, after knowing the truth:

After having realized the truth, we can either totally turn inwards and become a yogi or can play our part the same part that we play but a little less intensely like in a movie. For example, the rich and poor become equally important roles, neither to belittle the other group. My suggestion would be to not be the audience, but, be a visitor to the shootings I leave it to the readers how to go forward. However, like to repeat that the right priorities for different aspects of life during this time is more important than the absolute truth. However, I suggest them to first uncover their defects in intelligence and try to correct them using mental inputs similar to how it is provided in the fourth section.

Nature of the mind and higher purposes:

We have understood that we need to just maintain consciousness of the best bliss. However, this knowledge is not enough to achieve it because we are barely peaceful. Let us understand the reason for stress in this life.

Why are we not peaceful? How to achieve peacefulness?

From our understanding of the nature of existence, consciousness and bliss, we have come to the conclusion that we just want to have the consciousness of better bliss. However, we will find this difficult because of two reasons. The reason number one is the wavering and exaggerated thoughts and the reason number two is the higher purposes in life. We will cover these two in the next two sections to make our understanding of the reality, a complete one.

Brief understanding of human mind:
The major processes in our mind are the thoughts, feelings, consciousness, subconscious will, conscious will, the intelligence of conscious will, intelligence unconscious will and the common memories.
The intelligence that powers the subconscious will takes into consideration our previous thoughts and perceptions from the common memories and creates scenarios for further unconscious thoughts. The memories have along with other information the intensity of perception of the thought. This automatic process often creates exaggerated and stressful thoughts, based on the intensity of perception of the memories. We have to realize that these are not thoughts initiated by us and we should not own them. We need to deal with them consciously by downplaying them and often dismissing them. However, to have better control over our thoughts, we need to increase our share of conscious thoughts. This can be done by conscious and deep questioning by self-inquiry and by providing right mental inputs by way of contemplation and study of established facts. Another thing that we can do, is to improve our memories by starting to perceive with lesser intensity. These will be part of conscious intelligence. Moreover, we have to be frequently be conscious of our unconscious thoughts and deal with them, based on the enquiry into conscious intelligence maintained by our mental inputs. Most of us have no distinction between the incoming thoughts and the conscious inputs and hence believe and own the stressful thoughts and suffer from them.

Higher Purposes in life:
It is obvious that our creators do not want us to do anything for them materially. They can achieve anything they want by just coding. Even they can achieve any type of consciousness of bliss they want by means of coding. Therefore, their purpose in creating the world was creativity in building systems initially and later creating stories of sustained life. If the stories of sustained life have to be alive for millions of years there has to be a direction of traversing from the under developed to developed state, individually and in the system. Moreover, there has to be some level negative aspects at the right proportion to enable different types of stories and to maintain seriousness among the animals and the people. These negative aspects also serve the purpose of providing learning opportunities. The understanding of negative aspects helps us in accepting their place in the society and thereby not getting stressful from them. If we can downplay the situations, they will not be problematic. All stressful situations are caused due to our giving too much importance to the end results. One way of overcoming stressful situations is to have a level of acceptance of all situations. We need to realize that the life is a story, in which all possibilities exist, depending on the progress of the script. The bottom line is that understanding the nature of the world helps in perceiving everything with the right intensity. When we reckon things as gross, we perceive with greater intensity than when we reckon them as subtle. Therefore, the knowledge that matter is just traversing patterns, in the single, ubiquitous, entity called Being, will help us to perceive everything with lesser intensity. Moreover, the fact that our sensitivities are actually sensitivities at random spots of being, clearly guides us towards perceptions with lower intensity.

Decoupling of external and internal worlds:

We can have great consciousness of bliss by decoupling our external and internal worlds. Just because it is not the norm, many of us will be afraid to do so. Moreover, many will hate this idea. But, who knows, that may be the trend in the future after AI has taken away all types of physical action. There is always a start, for something that no one thought about before.

For example, we can just decide that all the celebrities are our classmates and they liked me. It is like writing a story and believing it to be true. Why do we have to have stories only in the book or a movie. Why not we all be the creator of our own small movie and enjoy it with loaded reality. As far as discussing with someone is concerned, we need to only consider what has physically happened. But for thinking, sky is not the limit. We are just busy getting want we want. Therefore, we did not explore our mind to get the best consciousness of bliss. This is the cheap actual intelligence that has the ability to disrupt many systems in the new economy. You just don't need any electronic gadgets, no need to travel and tour, and luxury infrastructure. We will just need a place to relax and timely food and water. Who knows, we may be moving towards that or there is already a reality somewhere, where only internal mind exploration only happens. In other words, implications of focus on internal mind will bring back importance of older economies. I know there are drawbacks in totally neglecting outside world, because all new ideas remain useful and exciting for a short period and the best is achieved with a right mix of both worlds. Moreover, it will be very farfetched as of now due to limited brain capacity. However, if new economises makes it too unreasonable for some countries, they may try to experiment on this, if they realize that blissful state can be achieved without external accomplishments.

Why this type of thinking is not totally bad, even though the time has not yet come for this? If we understand reality, everything that perceive are just coding patterns. When we can depend on a coding pattern of something happening physically to be a transaction of occurrence, we can also depend on the coding patterns in our mental imaginations to to be a transaction of occurrence. What binds us to restrict it to only happening outside. Everything is after all an illusion. Why restrict ourselves to only one type. We have two distinct worlds, one outside and one inside. The inside one can be explored separate based on the mind’s true potential.

Summary of the section:

There are two reasons for not realizing good consciousness of bliss. One is the random, exaggerated thoughts from the subconscious mind and another is the conflict of interest from higher powers, who wants interesting and serious stories needing negative roles. Therefore, we should be more mindful of our subconscious thoughts and handle them without owning them. We should also realize that there is place of some level of negativity in our lives to have an opportunity to face challenges and also for the reason that without negatives there can’t be many types of stories in life.

This universe is a ubiquitous single entity called, the Being, or the Brahman and all our sensitivities are actually experienced by random spots in it, we need to try to not take our life too seriously. We have seen in the last section, that perception with high priorities is the cause of incorrect decisions. Therefore, realization of the true nature of universe, helps us to perceive with less intensity.

Depending on our circumstances, we should decide whether we should decide how much we should give importance to internal aspects of improving our mental capabilities compared to looking at the external accomplishments. We may even look at decoupling our internal and external aspects, however little carefully and enjoy the experience of both worlds.

By regular practice of mental inputs about the nature of the universe we can downplay the stressful thoughts and make our little decisions for contentment, peace and joy.

SECTION III - PURPOSE

In this section, we will review the mental satisfaction derived from conventional objectives of life like career, family, business etc., and understand its drawbacks, look at how to attain the same mental end result using realizations in philosophy and arrive at self-identification, purpose and positioning in this world. The objective, is to find and hold on to something, to decide about our feelings when there are no current issues and we just want a purpose to think about to decide about the current moment.

Review of objectives in life:

We all want to be rich, healthy, be recognized by the society, be a celebrity and have the power to change everything around to feel fully secured. While we need to have luck, resources, intelligence and opportunity to achieve the above, many of us do not have sufficient levels of these requirements to achieve the above objectives. In our path to achieve the objectives many of us realize about the lower limits of the extent we can achieve them. However, our belief in those objectives has created desires, fears and ego. We often compare with some of our extended family members or other acquaintances, who have achieved more than us and we feel sad about our lower achievements. We also feel sad when something happens, that affect our finances, health, honour, power or security. However, if we think deeply about our objectives, we will realize that the reason why we want to achieve the above objectives is that we reckon achieving them will make us happy and make us feel better than others. We believe in those objectives so much that we never thought that anything else could make us happy or feel better than others. However, on some self-awareness we will realize that we reckon the above objectives when attained will give us happiness and psychological leverage only because we gave importance to those four objectives. Our mind basically works on the relative importance of various aspects of life. It is like a computer and just processes information based on how we input information to it. For example, if we believed lack of wealth is advantageous than being rich, then we will try to acquire only how much wealth that is needed, and not envy others who are rich and not get too scared of losing money. Off course it is very difficult to believe in such a thing if we have spent lot of years believing otherwise. The point I want to convey is that there is lots of scope to tweak our minds to feel happy and psychologically great, without achieving any of the objectives, we thought were necessary.  We need to just change our beliefs or priorities about important aspects of life to be more balanced, keeping in view the real purpose of feeling good and seeking it directly through our priorities instead of seeking it through external means. We can change our beliefs by regular self-affirmations, which work like patches that suit our life conditions. Most of our problems are due to our beliefs in the above-mentioned objectives. For example, our problem maybe we do not have enough money, we have diseases, people do not respect us, or we lost something and we can’t accept certain situations. All of these do not matter so much if we realize the true nature of this world and our life. In fact, there is a way to feel good about ourselves psychologically, without achieving any of the above-mentioned objectives.

This brings me to the consolidation of my main realizations in philosophy. When I say philosophy, I mean, psychology and metaphysics also included. For the sake of this topic, I call them the seven main principles of philosophy.

Main realizations in philosophy:

The realizations in philosophy that I consider very important are as follows:
1. Mind is in better control if we start perceiving everything with lower intensity. Moreover, we will be more intelligent and mindful when we are able to perceive everything with lesser intensity. On the contrary, when the intensity of perception of any aspect is very high, our mind ignores the other relevant aspects, which will lead to incorrect decisions, thinking, feeling and actions.

Only side effect to perceiving with lower intensity is we will not remember our memories after few minutes. We should manage this aspect with keeping alarms and time tables.

2. We can perceive everything the way we want for example we can perceive hardships as better than luxury, poor as better than rich, diseased as better than healthy, stressful as better than calm. Only when we perceive some things as negative, they affect us more. Our decisions every moment guide our life more than anything else. If we are able to decide to be calm, peaceful, happy, contended, grateful, accomplished, successful and enlightened every moment there is no room for negative aspects in our life.

3. Mind works based on relative priorities of various aspects of life. Therefore, we must spend efforts in maintaining right priorities for important aspects of life. For example, if one gives more importance to the results than his own psychological status, there will be less peace and more anxiety. To relatively improve our psychological status, we should downplay the results to such an extent that achieving it is like just drinking a glass of water. Another example will be if we prioritize wealth over health then we will allow our self to burn out working hard. Similarly, if we prioritize health over mental or psychological wellness, we may worry too much about our minor problems in health instead of just doing what is needed to be done. Besides health, wealth and psychological wellness, we need to prioritize on security so that we are not very vulnerable. Everyone has to give importance to safety aspects as per one's needs. Another aspect is freedom, which is very essential for healthy living. Freedom to think, say and act within proper limits, is a basic fundamental necessity. Since we need many aspects like health, wealth, psychological wellness, family, career, knowledge, skill, freedom, security etc., which are almost all equally important, we should not give too much importance individually to any of this, because the relative importance of any individual aspect should be low, when all aspects are considered. On the contrary, when the intensity of perception of any of above is very high our mind ignores the other relevant aspects, which will lead to incorrect decisions, thoughts, feelings and actions. Furthermore, we should give more importance to present than the past or the future, to be in line with giving more priority to psychological wellness and knowledge compared to wealth and health. Wealth and health should be a byproduct of our engagement in life as per the right priorities, rather than an important objective to be met.

4. Only Brahman exists and our body and mind are just illusions created by property changes at its different points. When the body moves, only the coding patterns for visual property moves and when the body feels something the coding pattern for feel property moves parallel to the movement of the body. Therefore, what happens to the body is not personal to us and therefore, we should give very less importance to our health issues, while doing what needed to be done for the maintenance of the body, similar to how we maintain an automobile.

5. Anything exists for us individually only when we pay attention to it. We should take a cue from the fact that light behaves differently when it is observed compared to when it is not. Similarly, our problems should be thought about only when we are trying to find a solution for them. Having known that all that exists is Brahman and coding patterns in it, why we should brood about anything unless it helps us. Our attention should be more on our daily routine and daily improvements in our psychological status.

6. There is a higher intelligence with tremendous knowledge, which it acquired over millions of years, which oversees the universe. The only reason that we find some things as unfair is only because we take many things personally whereas everything is justified at the proportion at which it is happening as the story of life is developed by millions of years of research as may be estimated by the robustness of the design that takes into consideration many aspects like story content, righteousness, learning curve, horror, tragedy, pleasures, pains, imaginations, thrill, seriousness, humour etc. in the right proportion.

7. Our present decisions, thoughts and actions is based on our past inputs as perceptions, external stimuli and higher intelligence. At times the higher intelligence controls our decisions, thoughts, feelings and actions based on the story that is evolving, which takes into consideration our past inputs as perceptions and also the past inputs and perceptions of those connected to us. Therefore, we may say that we only have partial free will. We only have control over how we want to perceive everything and not the end results. Therefore, proper mental inputs are the most important aspect in improving our psychological intelligence.

Achieving psychological objectives:

We can apply the above principles to create patches to our mind to enable us feel psychologically elevated, irrespective of our life situations. In fact, our problems affect us only because we have not raised ourselves psychologically above the problems or we have given too much importance to our problems. In other words, we should raise our psychological level relatively higher than whatever we may get to perceive, to the extent that nothing affects us. One way of doing this is to keep bringing up all our likely problematic issues in the mind and downplaying them by applying the above principles. Another thing that we can do is to assign not so good thoughts during happy feelings and accept sad feelings as beneficial. For example, when we are happy that we have done a great job we should think about poverty, bad road conditions, politics, pollution etc., with the same good feeling. Another example would be that, when we are sad about losing money, colour the feeling as positive and accept that losing money sometimes is good for the purpose of our being tested or because of the learning opportunity. In this way we can take care of all obstacles which prevent us from being psychologically great; by prioritizing it as the core instead of other objectives like wealth, which we felt were most important. In other words, we try reducing the intensity of negative thoughts so that their relative priority is less than how we want to feel psychologically. The bottom line is that we are psychologically lesser than whatever gets more importance than our psychological status. If we raise our psychological status very high, most things will not bother us.

When we have achieved high psychological state, we will be just doing our small bit to involve in the story that is getting unfolded, while ensuring our needs are met and having no wants and identifications with any group.

Practicing mental inputs provided in the next section, is an example of providing mental patches to the mind to achieve high psychological status, which is necessary for getting our little decisions correct.

Self-identification, purpose and positioning

From the above realizations in philosophy and the preceding sections it is suggested that our purpose in life should be to raise our psychological status in order to make our little decisions correctly. However, if we further ask why we need to the little decisions correctly, we will realize that we want to experience life as it is rather than with the attached stories, because we have little control on the type of stories and attached sensitivities we get to experience. In other words, our purpose is to just be in the now, or to just be. Therefore, we should consider only our purpose as to just be, when we take the little decisions, when there are no issues involved and we should also consider the relative priorities along with the purpose, when there are issues involved. Based on the priority and reality, the following are my identification, purpose and positioning in this world. When I remember these aspects while taking my small decisions, I will find myself with ease and peace. Readers are encouraged to have their own statements for their identification, purpose and positioning

Self-identification:

I identify with the remainder of existence, where the universe is trying to expand. Identifying with anything else will have side effects. This is the largest part of existence and core of who I am.

My purpose in this life:

My purpose should be something that I am always achieving. Therefore, purpose is to just be. Everything else has a side effect. This goes with my identification. I will exist even after death of the body. Therefore, my purpose will be everlasting. However, I have a mission to have maximum number of good moments as possible, based on the story my life is taking forward.

Positioning myself in this world:

Although, I am just existence, I am configured to be conscious of bliss aspects of existence. Therefore, I want to be more conscious of better bliss configurations by improving my little decisions by practicing to decide based on right priority, reality and right purpose. However, I want to resonate with the reality. Reality includes all the dualities in the configured world. I may have my small intent every now and then, but only with intention of having a small stake into my understanding of collectively trying a better story in the earth. However, I do not belong here. I will just maximise the consciousness of absolute bliss.

Summary of this section:

Based on the psychological possibilities, it is suggested to look inwards for our purpose in life. Our rightful purpose is suggested to be simply present in the now. Most of the time, when we are not facing any issues, we should make our small decisions to just be in the now. When some issue is being handled, it is all about our psychological status and the perception with right relative priorities of the related aspects.

SECTION IV - PRACTICE

Our present perception depends on the cumulative impressions in our memory of related aspects and our present psychological status. The impressions also have the intensity of perceptions recorded in it. Therefore, if we have made incorrect perceptions for a long duration, to correct the cumulative impressions, it takes a long time, with substantial improvement in the first month and progressing with smaller levels of improvements in the subsequent months. Therefore, if we have to have great level of transformation, we need to patiently practice to provide the mental inputs for at least a few years. When we practice mental inputs correctly, both our psychological status as well as our cumulative impressions of decisions improve. The psychological status will help in feeling good and the cumulative impressions will help in deciding better.

Plan for practice of mental inputs:

In this section we will have a quick recap of what we learnt in the previous sections and explore their implications. This will be followed by a list of points for mental inputs. We have to read and contemplate on the text in this section to start making our little decisions correctly. Readers are advised to apply the concepts in their everyday life. Furthermore, readers are advised to study the major psychological aspects, that are explained in the appendix I.

In the first section we understood the importance of having good hold of relative importance of important aspects of life. This skill is very important in making the little decisions when more than two things seek our attentions. However, we have to understand that most decisions are time and context sensitive. Here, the intensions for which we make the particular decision is very important, because it is not only about the external end results but also about our internal end results. For example, one may decide to stay silent in a situation because of fear and another may decide because his decision of remaining silent was made considering many aspects. In this case the internal end results will be differing for each person. Bowing down is not bad. Bowing down due to fear is not good.

In the second section, we realized that the universe is a single, ubiquitous, formless entity and we are copies of patterns and sensitivities traversing due to motions of planets, objects and ourselves. Therefore, we should not take anything personally. We also understood in this section the distinction between the subconscious thoughts and our conscious enquiry and inputs. We have learnt that we have to be more mindful of the exaggerated and challenging subconscious thoughts and deal with them by having great conscious intelligence, developed by proper mental inputs. In this section, we also understood the importance of negative aspects in right proportions, due to their importance in creating stories and seriousness.

In the third section we understood that the sense of accomplishments can be achieved without material success. Therefore, the motivation for work should be from other aspects like optimization of time, effort and other resources. All our purposes will have the negative side effect of not being relevant through all times. Initially, we should have the purpose of having better consciousness of bliss and later on our purpose should be to just be. The best quality of consciousness of bliss, without any side effects can be achieved during perception of nothingness. This is the infant like consciousness of bliss, coming out of total ignorance. All other consciousness will have the side effect of imperfection of exception of a fact or incorrect intensity of perception. We also realized that the purpose should be considered alone while deciding about how we want to feel at this moment, when no issues are involved, where as it should be considered along with the relative priorities of important aspects of life while making decisions involving two or more aspects.

The nature of the reality should be considered for the intensity of perception.

We have to practice providing mental inputs to ourselves based on our priority, the reality and purpose. If we keep reading the mental inputs and contemplate on them, they will start showing results towards a transformed me who can make the small decisions effortlessly about how to perceive the present moment to maintain satisfaction at all times. Readers are encouraged to have their own items in the sample list for mental inputs, mentioned below. This section is purposely not exhaustive so that readers could study and make their own lists depending on their own circumstances and priorities.

Following are some of the points to contemplate on regularly.

Mental Inputs:

* I do not want happiness from property and stock appreciation. I want contentment from the little decisions that I take about how I want to feel at the moment. The properties and stocks are for future maintenance and not for present emotions.

* I want to achieve such a psychological status, wherein anything happening outside will not affect my mental status. If I worry about anything, it would mean my psychological status is less compared to my perception of that thing.

* I will always try be conscious of my subconscious thoughts and without owning them try to deal with them.

* I will not get disturbed by the negative things happening around me. Everything has a place to a large extent, depending on the circumstances. Therefore, I will have some level of acceptance to even the most negative events happening around and to me.

* I will not judge my family members based on my ideas. They are autonomous and are better without being ideal. Idealistic looks better only in paper. We are rightly challenged by inappropriate behaviour, in order to get a chance to deal with them.

* I will always remember to be flexible and humble. I will always consider that if I was wrong, what way I would be wrong. I will always perceive that I don't know enough about the subject, so that I keep getting the guidance.

* I will never consider anyone above me or below me in importance. I will see everyone equally.

* This moment is all that I have. I will make the most of it. Past is inconsequential and future will take care of itself.

* All emotions are okay at the right proportions. However, we have apply patches towards the extremes.

* Be okay with all the decisions that you make even if it is apparently not up to the mark. We never know what prompted us to take them. Sometimes it is our old habits and sometimes it is prompting from the higher powers. Peaceful and perfect sense never happens as there is always importance for unexpected serious results.

* I will frequently contemplate that I do not know anything. I do not know what will happen. I do not know who I am. I do not know what is good and what is bad. I do not know what I need. I just don't desire or fear or possess anything.

• You are just consciousness of bliss. Try to develop bliss directly and not through accumulations.

• The reasons for your emotional state of good or bad are your decisions. The external factors only have the influential potential but can be vetoed by your decisions.

• Mindful decisions taken with purpose in mind keeps our emotions under control.

• How you perceive a stimulus is more important than the stimulus.

• The present moment is more important than the past or future moment. Decide to be satisfied at this moment.

• The richness appears to be desirable only because we decided that to be important. Equality is the reality.

• The success appears to be desirable only because we have decided it to be important. Equality is the reality.

• Everything appears to be so because of our conditioning. Without the conditioning everything is same and all are equal.

• Some things make us happy because we gave importance to those things.

• Our purpose is to just be. All other purposes have side effects and can't be achieved immediately.

• Freedom and acceptance go hand in hand. If we can accept everything that happens to us, we can live with the freedom to do what we want.

• We should remember that we live for a short duration after which nothing really matters.

• Our daily routine, exercises routine and mental upliftment are the only things that matter.

• We should accept that anything that has happened has happened for the good. Everything is not about only us.

• All the negative things have some silver lining. We should learn to perceive everything positively.

• How you want to decide about the present moment is more important than anything external that can happen to us. Decide it to be satisfying.

• All the negative things that happen to us is needed for the higher powers for creating better story in the planet. It’s not only about us. Moreover, we have to learn to feel better in spite of challenging situations.

• We worry and overthink about many situations because to give too much importance to those aspects. We should learn to downplay all our worries and just do what is needed to do when the time comes.

• We have to realize that we are plain existence which is configured to be conscious of bliss settings around the body. When we die, we are configured back to plain existence. Therefore, we should downplay diseases and death.

• We can perceive everything the way we want. We should always perceive with the intention of getting better vibes for the moment.

• We should frequently say that I am rock solid and supreme and nothing affects me. All the problems are too small compared to my psychological strength.

• We should frequently say that our body is an illusion and nothing that happens to it is really that important.

• We should not take our pains personally. The pains that we experience are in fact suffered by random spots in the being.

• No single thing is more than 5% important because there are more than 20 things very important. Do not worry too much about any one thing that has not worked. Remember, the remaining 19 are okay.

• If we can regularly decide that everything is in order, over a period of time that becomes our reality.

• Acceptance and flexibility in approaches are very important for living happily.

• We should give more importance to process improvements than the end results.

• Worrying over end results over which we have very little control is the single biggest reason for unhappiness.

• Equality is the reality, which when realized will lead to highest level pf peace.

• All differences perceived between places, objects and people are highly exaggerated. To compensate we need to perceive equality.

• Our real purpose is to just be. Therefore, anything that happens to us is inconsequential. However, for maintenance purpose we have to spend effort for our daily routine, health routine and this practice of mental inputs.

• This world is an illusion and therefore, we should not give importance to success and failure.

• To have contentment at this moment is more important than and end result that we may achieve in future.

• Freedom to think and act is more important than any riches that we could attain.

• Psychological wellness is the most important aspect after freedom to think and act. If you have a freedom to think and act and have developed good psychological wellness than it does not matter if you develop some health issues. These are like challenges which we can easily overcome. Therefore, spend time in providing mental inputs for psychological wellness.

• Health is more important than wealth. If you have a good health do not worry if you could not make a good career or relationship. Just keep saying all are equal in most respects. However, we need to try to improve our chances by learning tools and techniques.

• Acceptance and anticipation of difficult situations are very important for growth in competitive atmosphere.

• At the right proportion everything and every aspect of life is necessary for different types of stories needed for maintenance of interest and seriousness in life. We should remember that everything is not about me individually and have somewhat acceptance for apparently negative aspects. We need to not feel intensely about anything.

• Knowledge and skills needed to take right decisions in life about external aspects of career and internal aspects of mental development are both very important. However, there is a limit for external achievements and also psychological improvements are alone enough in most cases and they also help in achieving external knowledge and skills. Therefore, we must focus in developing psychological prowess along with academic studies.

• It is okay if no one likes you or your ideas. Never give importance to what others think of you. Have a self-worth based on thorough understanding of the self. It may be possible that you have out grown compared to others and they can't comprehend your understandings.

Summary of this section:

Regular contemplation of right information of some important concepts derived from or priorities, realities and purposes helps us in attaining a high status of psychological being, which in turn help us to make our little decisions to our advantage.

To conclude this section, I provide some useful tips to improve our decision-making ability.

Tips for improving decisions:

1. We should always assume that our present decision may be incorrect. In doing so we will know about a better one. However, we have to make sure that we are assuming with less intensity and are looking for just a small improvement, so that our confidence is not affected.

2. We should always assume that we are all not good enough so that we can improve. However, we have to make sure that we are assuming with less intensity and are looking for just a small improvement, so that our confidence is not affected.

3. If we feel that anyone in this world is luckier than me, we need to work out the concepts in this book further, until we feel that no one is luckier than me.

4. There will be side effects even for good decisions and we need to decide about their perception correctly.

5. We need to check whether the small decision that we are taking presently is out of urge, out of aversion or out of plain need. Checking our intensity of perception in a scale of 1 to 10, will help us know it. If it is out of urge, we need to really check if it is needed right now and postpone the decision. If we are avoiding an important decision out of aversion, we need to decide it is needed and take steps immediately.

CONCLUSION

To summarize, our entire reality is based on the little decisions that we make throughout the day and throughout the life. The purpose in life should be thought of when we have to make little decisions about how to feel, when there are no issues involved. The purpose should be considered along with the relative priorities of important aspects of life while making decisions involving two or more aspects. The nature of the reality should be considered for the intensity of perception.

If we can learn to make the decisions right, we can swim though the ocean of life with ease. To start with we need to just focus on the little decisions with the intention of correcting them. Most of us only focus on external aspects and not give enough importance to our way of perceptions. Our perceptions depend on the relative importance we give to various aspects of life. Once we correct the priorities by practice of mental inputs we are in the path of a great transformation, which leads to leaps and bounds of improvements in the quality of life. One of the important pillars of transformation is the realization of equality in all beings. Another pillar is understanding the nature of this life and not taking anything personally and not perceiving anything with great intensity. Less attachments and more flexibility are the bricks of strength of this pillar. The third pillar is recognition of negative aspects in life for their story content. The final and most important pillar is that this life is as we decide it to be and we can decide it to be as we want. Regular practices of mental inputs are the steel for strength of all the pillars.

The bottom line is that we should regularly be conscious of the bliss of ownership of everything and the bliss of success in understanding what everything is all about, which a selected few know about as of now. This should mask everything else that could happen in our lives by prioritizing and reliving the conscious bliss moments and downplaying the negative aspects.

Moreover, we should encash on the fact that ignorance is really great bliss. After achieving whatever we want in life we should go back to ignorance. We need to regularly bring to our conscious the fact that we really know nothing. Everything is a guess work. Therefore, we should be in consciousness with ignorance, without feeling less about it but feeling satisfied with it, just like a baby is satisfied in her mom's hands. So, from everything that we claim that we achieved we go back to the infant stage, when we had the consciousness of the best possible bliss.

As we conclude with these takeaways, remember: the end of this book is simply the start of your practice.

Key takeaways from the book.

1. Everything is the same and equal.

2. Nothing is personal.

3. All the negatives have a place.

4. Anything can happen.

5. Everything is as it should be.

6. Everything is as you decide.

7. You can decide anything the way you want.

And finally, after achieving the psychological prowess and enlightenment, we should remember that our final purpose is to just be. All consciousness of great bliss is nothing but delusional addictions. Therefore, our final takeaway should be as follows:

- I DON'T KNOW WHO I AM
- I DON'T WANT ANYTHING
- I DON'T KNOW ANYTHING

**********

APPENDIX I

MAJOR PSYCHOLOGICAL ASPECTS OF LIFE

To improve our decisions, we should have the right perceptions about the major aspects that affect our decision making.

Desires

Desires are manifestation of our attractions to various aspects of life. These form strong attachments to people, places, objects and events. The desires that we have, manifest as attachments to wealth, family, comforts, luxury, knowledge, beauty, power, recognition and long and healthy life. Our desires lead to expectations and will lead to discontentment when the expectations are not fulfilled. When our expectations are fulfilled, the happiness is temporary due to more expectations and other issues. Moreover, we will realize that the desires and fulfilment are illusionary and not real. The happiness that we attain when we get what we desire is not due to things we attain. The happiness is due to our intensity of perception. Therefore, we can gradually train our minds to be happy for the things that we have and increase the happy moments. However, being very happy has some side effects. Happiness keeps our mind very excited and therefore affects our intelligence. Therefore, to be contented is a better objective than to be happy. We need fewer things to be contended than to be happy. Even if we want to be happy it is better to feel happy about small improvements here and there, rather than from our desires to attain an end result.

Our desires and when they are excessive, they lead to incorrect perceptions, which in turn lead to our giving too much importance to the aspects we desire and neglecting other equally important aspects. This results in skewed intelligence. At their right levels all desires are useful. Moreover, some desires help us more than others. If we desire to be smiling irrespective of circumstances, it is a good desire. Desire to put in our best efforts in our endeavours is a good desire. The desire to look for equality among all people is a good desire. The desire to seek happiness in life is good desire. Problem is when we desire particular results which are not in our control like marks in exams, promotion in career or profit in business. Such things depend on various factors and such desires affect our thinking and cause stress. A small measure of desire of such things causes motivation and an excess of these desires cause disappointments, stress and affect intelligence. We are not ready to get what we desire because our desires only get factored in our decision making. However, for right decisions we need more things than just desires. For example, there has to be considerations for peace, consideration for others, consideration for facts, consideration for decorum, consideration for logic, consideration for acceptance of higher desires, consideration for priorities and perspectives along with the desire to progress. For many people, the strong desires and fears make them overlook the other necessary aspects needed for sound decision making. In other words, it is desirable to have right desires, at the right intensities, in the right times of our lives.

The best way to overcome our desires is by daily affirmations like the following statements.

‘I do not need anything and I am contended with what I will get from the discretion of higher powers. I will only strive to improve upon the aspects that are possible by me. All our desires are illusions and do not actually provide permanent satisfaction on attainment'

Fears

Fears are manifestation of our repulsions to various aspects of life. The fears that we have affect our physical and mental health and not allow us to take right decisions in life.  Some of the main fears are the fear of losing health, wealth and family. Most of the fears are illusionary or exaggerated and may not happen in real.  When fears are at the right level, they make us take action towards enhancing security aspects in our lives. However, when the fears are excessive, they cause worries and anxiety. We need to identify all our fears and work on them individually. The action on them may be a change in perception or doing something to prevent what we fear. In other words, we should deal with our fear by having faith in our higher powers and also doing our bit to secure ourselves from the aspects we fear about.

The best way to overcome fear is by daily affirmations like the following statements

'I do not need to fear anything because I will try my best to secure myself and beyond that it is as per the discretion of higher powers to protect me. I do not want to spoil my present moment worrying about the future. I would rather ensure to be as secure as possible and concentrate on what I want to achieve in life'

Ego

Ego is the manifestation of our identification with self. Our ego increases the intensity of our desires and fears. We need to understand that everything that is happening is happening to the universe and is not personal.

The best way to get rid of our ego is by daily affirmations like the following statements.

'I am just a drop in the ocean and I am not substantial individually. Nothing is personal about me. I can only contribute to the ocean by doing my little bit'

Happiness, love and bliss

When we are happy about getting something, we give more importance to getting that thing than to be happy, thinking that getting that thing made us happy. Therefore, when we lose such a thing we become unhappy. Therefore, we can remain happy if our priority for being happy is more than anything that may happen. How much a particular aspect of life gives us happiness and the duration of happiness are dependent on the amount of importance we give to that aspect. Similarly, how much unhappiness a particular aspect of life makes us and duration of sadness are dependent on the importance we give to that aspect. Therefore, to maximize happiness we should have gratitude for what we have and reduce the importance of what we lack. We should also downplay our problems so that they do not overwhelm us.

One more thing that we can do to remain happy is to decide on something which will always happen and will give us maximum happiness. For example, we can daily contemplate with firm belief that the passing of a day gives maximum happiness. When we do that, we will frequently realize the passing of a day with enhanced happiness. This happiness will gradually overshadow everything else. This type of contemplation leads to a very gradual change but will be very effective.

Happiness, love and bliss are similar states, with differences in reasons for the state and degree of their fleeting characteristic. To be continually blissful, we need to either perceive everything as blissful or our attention should be always on something blissful. While the first one is difficult as in this case, we need to change our ways of perception, the second one is practically impossible as our mind continually brings in new thoughts, where our attention goes automatically. We could try a combination of both the approaches. In this, while we try to perceive everything as blissful, we also try to bring back our attention to something that is permanently blissful. When the reason for the bliss is an external state, it is more fleeting than when it is for an internal state. When the reason for bliss is for the internal state associated with body or mind it is more fleeting than when the reason for bliss is at the state of intelligence. However, to achieve continual bliss based on our intelligence, it takes very long time as in this case we need to undertake philosophical practices to upgrade our entire cumulative impressions in our memories.

One of the important things to achieve is to love everything around as they are. The things that block us from realizing true love are our likes and dislikes. Real love is experienced when we realize equality mindset. Our selective likes and dislikes are impurities in our mindsets, which create attraction and repulsion. The attraction and repulsion give rise to wants and aversions. When a mind with wants and aversions come across unexpected facets of reality, the state of bliss gets disturbed. To achieve a continual state of bliss we need to work on every aspect that could break a state of bliss. Our mind should be trained to perceive all those aspects as good.

Love with a reason is not the true as loving with a reason is actually loving some aspect of our desires than the person, thing or any other external or internal state. You do not need a person to love. Its all in the mindset. The closest word to love is to admire and that of pleasure is to want. When you admire something which changes its state then our state of happiness will also change accordingly. Therefore, we should choose to admire something that remains the same for our lifespan. One such thing is continuous passing of time. When you admire fully there is no space for want. When you fully want something there is no space for admiration. True love comes from our sufficiency and yet something to admire about. When we are not sufficient it is a combination of want and admire and therefore is just a glimpse of admiration and desire. When the admiration comes from sufficiency it has a higher position than wanting. We progress from higher levels of want to higher levels of love.

In summary, to be continually blissful, we need to either perceive everything as blissful or our attention should be always on something blissful. We are happy or sad by an event only because we give more importance to that event than to being happy or sad and paint the event as happy or sad based on our priorities in life. In other words, we will be always happy if we could change the priority for being happy to be more than anything that may happen. This requires regular contemplation on the priorities which we wish to have. One way of doing this is to imagine about all the things that made us unhappy in the past and perceive them as they were for our good by smiling through. This will change our mindsets about those situations and will enable us to be happy when these situations come by in future. When we truly love a person, we see our reflection in that person. In that state there is no difference between us and our surroundings. To achieve this state a lifetime of philosophical practice may be needed. The bottom line is that happiness is a decision and to take that decision we need to do regular affirmations.

Self-worth and confidence

Our self-worth should be such that we nether reckon ourselves neither inferior nor superior to anyone. Such a perception is possible if we think all are equal. We need to understand and realize that we are carrying out roles in life based on the plan of our higher powers. The plan of this world is not on the basis of perfect roles for everyone but of seriously interesting ones with lots of nuances and incremental changes. Those people who have higher achievements have it due to the kind of roles they are playing and for the roles they are playing. They are able to achieve their goals due to the support they get for the roles they are playing. Moreover, our higher powers don't give importance to only the achievers. The apparently non-achievers are significantly important for the maintenance of the ecosystem and for their story content. Therefore, we all have the same worth in the eyes of the highest powers.

In summary, we need to realize that considering all our circumstances and the belief that god is fair for everyone, we are all equal in terms of our worth.

Confidence doesn't come from surety of success alone. It comes from the realization of our sufficiency to handle the situation. We need to develop ourselves to feel sufficient besides preparing ourselves for the tasks in hand. Confidence comes from true self-worth when it is independent of any outcome. We need to realize that failure is a part of life and not get attached to success alone. Confidence comes when we reckon that nothing really is at stake. When results do not matter and giving your best shot only matters. Giving too much importance to others affects our own confidence. We should reckon that everything evens out and thus all are equal. Looking for perfection in all matters also affects our confidence. Therefore, to gain confidence in facing the situation we need to first downplay the situation and make the situation appear menial and manageable.

In summary, self-confidence comes from the realization that we are sufficient for the shot of the scene of the story being directed by our higher powers. We need to only prepare for the future scenes, but for the current scene we are fully sufficient.

Our higher powers know us in and out and are sure that we are perfect for the present scene.

The bottom line is that our self-worth and confidence are our decisions and to take that decisions we need to do right kind of affirmations on the daily basis.

Intelligence

If our creators wanted, they could have made us more intelligent and knowledgeable. It is very clear that their main intention is not to get things done from us for them but to make an interesting world with lots of stories along with sustained learning opportunities for millions of years. Therefore, they have made sure that things are not too easy for us and we need to gradually improve ourselves to understand and master our world. It is because of the same reason that a man with experience can do better that an intelligent novice. The gradual path of learning is planned so that the development of the world is at the right pace and also to enable creation of desired stories. It is because of our creators' plan of slow progress, that we forget what we study and have to do regular practice to remember the subject. One important side effect of the slow learning process is that we will never be able to suggest improvement areas to our creators, who have millions of years of experience. It is the first experience of the world that made our creators the most powerful. Our creators gained immense knowledge and expertise by applying intelligence to the resource of life for billions of years.

Our intelligence can be called as a process of using our will to estimate, analyse and extrapolate the information perceived by the sense organs and the mind. It can also be called as the skill to use our will to enhance our knowledge, expertise, connections and other resources based on logic and the right allocation of time, effort, resources, and people. It is the dynamic processor of the mind. It enhances our knowledge and expertise by questioning the mind for improvements. The quality and quantity of our knowledge depends on our intelligence. Our intelligence is active at every moment in deciding our next thought and action and also in estimating, analyzing and extrapolating the information from sense organs and the mind. Our intelligence decides where our attention points to at the current moment and our knowledge and expertise depend on the time of attention spent in the respective area of knowledge and expertise. In other words, intelligence is just processing of memories based on some criteria in another memory location. Similar to in a computer there cannot be any processing or intelligence without memories or knowledge.

There are two aspects in developing intelligence. One is the questioning our mind for improvements and new perspectives, whenever a new thought comes. The other one is spending time on the particular area of interest to acquire incremental and cumulative expertise. The first aspect improves the speed of development and the second one increases the number of reusable solutions. There should be clear discrimination between our propensity for general improvements and the acquired experience to tackle known issues. The first aspect is like sharpening the knife and the second one is learning how to cut different types of vegetable.

One of the areas where our intelligence is usually lacking and needs to be improved is estimating the priority of information. When the priority of some aspects is excessive there is wastage of time and inaccuracy of results. The incorrect priorities are due to character defects that stem from excessive desires, fears and ego.  Philosophy is one of the means of correcting the priorities of various aspects of life.

Another area of improving our intelligence is to train our minds to look into depth and width of the issues against availability of time and other resources.

Intelligence is at the best when the mind is peaceful and there is a habit of querying our thoughts, actions and perceptions at the right intensity and frequency.

The bottom line is that our intelligence is based on our past decisions and to improve that we need to provide right mental inputs on the regular basis.

Expectations and fruits of action

We expect all good things to happen to us and fear bad things from happening. But our lives are like roles in the movies, based on the stories scripted by higher powers, and on the needs and capabilities of the individuals. Therefore, we should reckon that only a few can get lead roles and also that there may be misfortunes in life which should be handled and coped with. If we wear the shoes of our higher powers, we will know what to expect in life.

When we develop good relationship with our children or parents, we give more importance to them than ourselves. Similarly, when we develop good relations with God, we should give more importance to him than ourselves. God wants us to live our lives with the best of our abilities. However, if things do not go according to our expectations, it is just because of the stories scripted by God. Therefore, when we give right importance to our god, we will accept any negative outcomes and perceive misfortunes and failures with sportsmanship. The stories are more important than our individual roles. There is no way god can develop a story where all favourable things are happening to everyone at all times. Surely the experienced god must have some way to maintain fairness, revealing which will affect the script and the stories yet to be directed.

If end result is only important than the final end result of everyone is death only. Therefore, the journey or the process should be rejoiced and cherished and not the end result. All our actions are happening from the decisions taken from the priorities by which we tend to perceive the various aspects of life. If all the priorities are well balanced then right actions will result. When right actions match up with right opportunities the right result will happen. Moreover, as mentioned in earlier topics there are five types of wealth. The fruits of our actions may come off in any one of the types of wealth and also to any member of the family any time in the future. In short there may not be a direct and immediate consequence between action and the result. It is believed by many that we should not worry about results and only concentrate on efforts. Although this philosophy is useful, the problem is not the results but about looking for the right results. Looking out for results are no problems if we have the right priorities for important aspects of life. For example, if the priority for being a better person is more than the marks in school then we will be satisfied with better me even with fewer marks. We should not look a particular result in isolation but understand how they relate to one another along with the relative priorities of one another. Our expectations from others and from fruits of actions lead to loss of flexibility in our choices in life. Moreover, we need to realize that we plan our actions based on our priorities in life and the higher powers decide about the end results or fruits of our actions based on their own priorities.

In summary, we should have realistic expectations, along with those for negative results. We should focus on the things on which we have control, and let the higher powers decide about the end result. To be free from frustration and disappointments, we need to do some research about the likely causes of frustration and disappointments and try to have some acceptance about them. We need to realize that in such a vast world, with many centuries of progression, there will be myriad ways that circumstances may crop up for anybody and depending on the individual story, all possibilities of both positive and negative outcomes exist for anyone. We panic from adversities only due to not preparing ourselves mentally for the negative outcomes that can crop up from any situation, any time, for anybody.

The bottom line is that our expectations are our decisions and to control that we need to provide right kind of mental inputs on a regular basis.

Challenges and Misfortunes

Challenges and misfortunes are internal and external constraints imposed on us to induce the right level of difficulties in order to make our lives interesting to us and to the observer. There is value for our accomplishments only due to the difficulties faced in achieving success. The challenges in life are very important for us. Without the challenges life will soon start to become boring. There cannot be any psychological growth in us without the challenges faced by us. For example, if we imagine staying in the same grade for three or four years, we will realize how life will become boring without challenges. Thus, higher challenges virtually keep us growing in higher grades. We do not appreciate the challenges only because our focus is too much on the end result. Facing challenges successfully give us the thrill and experience. We just need to shift our attention from results to the pleasure of handling them. The misfortunes in our lives provide challenges that help us to grow psychologically. Psychological wealth is gained from experience of meeting challenges. Thus, there is a component of goodness in misfortunes. Challenges and misfortunes provide opportunities for learning and improvements which enables attainment of satisfaction and fulfilment in life. Challenges and misfortunes also provide surprise elements in our lives for the purpose of having some seriousness and suspense in the world. Moreover, without challenges and misfortunes it is not possible to create lots of stories. Personal growth along with challenges and misfortunes provide the direction for story lines needed for sustained interest for the observers.

To face challenges and misfortunes properly we need to learn to perceive them correctly. When our attention is on blaming someone or feeling dejected rather than finding solutions, we lose the time and opportunity for learning to handle and growing from such situations. Therefore, our first response to challenging situations and misfortunes should be that of acceptance. We need to reckon that the primary objective of our lives is to be part of an interesting story. In a story all situations are justified.

The bottom line is that we usually get it wrong about what we should accept and what we should question. We should accept what happens outside of us and question what happens in our minds, instead of our natural tendency to do the other way around. Our acceptance of challenges and misfortunes are the decisions which we can develop by right kind of mental inputs on a regular basis.

PERSONAL BIO

I have developed interest in spirituality from the year 2002 after some sudden change in my life condition, consequent to which I started reflecting on various aspects of spirituality like desire, fear, selfishness, acceptance, greed etc. This resulted in my getting transformed from a pleasure seeker to peace seeker. During the end of year 2014, I came across and read some philosophical books and actively started meditation and contemplation. This resulted in my getting transformed from a peace seeker to a researcher in philosophy. While I read and tried to understand the information in the books, I did not believe anything on face value. I always depended on logic. When I did self-inquiry about desires, fears and ego, I realized that the common thing about them is giving too much importance during perceptions. When I started reducing my desires, fears and ego, while still continuing on further self-inquiry, I realized that I became more peaceful, mindful and intelligent. On further self-inquiry, I realized how our mind works based on the relative importance of various aspects of life. I also realized that if we are able to perceive everything with lower intensity, our mind becomes more manageable, peaceful and perceptible to new ideas. On further self-inquiry I realized that there was a purpose for all aspects, including the negative aspects. At the right proportions everything that happens is justified. During such self inquires I kept getting ideas about the nature of this universe and our life till everything lead to a conclusion. I realized that in this universe in reality there is only a single ubiquitously present being, which can be called the Brahman. The Brahman can change vision and feel properties throughout its various points in its volume, based on codes of patterns sent to the points.  How this happens is known only our real creator or God. Obviously, some patterns sent to a point in its space leads to either change in visual effects or feel effects. There is no real movement in the being. The rotation, revolution, expansion of planets and stars along with movements of objects and the changes in senses and movements of beings in them are just changes in the vision and feel codes sent to its various points. The proof for all these except, for how the codes are implemented and transmitted, are in the second section, 'The Reality'.

Later on in my life I learnt how to design our life, irrespective of external situations. I realized that we can perceive everything the way we want by self-affirmations. Everything is good or bad only because we decide it to be good or bad. If we have erred in our perceptions about an issue for a long time or if we have some long persisting defects, we need to do regular mental inputs or self-affirmations with the correcting statements for long periods, depending on the frequency of incorrect perceptions in the past. This is like applying patches to correct them. Patches are self-affirmative sentences which use reverse psychology and is repeatedly inputted to the mind. For example, if someone is sad that he or she is poor and want to feel good, he or she must self-affirm that being poor is better than being rich. Once this is done we will realize the supporting aspects about being poor like I live with less support than the rich, god loves everyone, for god everyone is equally important, there is more equality than the differences when we consider that the Brahman alone exists, rich are more delusional and poor are more rooted to reality, the poor have less interference from the higher powers, the constraints that the poor faces are more challenging and therefore more interesting to the higher powers, it is only our decision that more money is better that makes us feel that to be rich is better where as in reality there is no difference between rich and poor, rich are actually not happy although they have all the comforts, I am more flexible than the rich, I can face more difficulties than the rich and finally I am sad because, due to my circumstances, my mind decided that to be poor is a bad thing, while there are more advantageous in being poor and psychologically I can still decide that I am the best.  We need to understand there is nothing limiting us to work to achieve our goals, even if we have the mindset that being poor is better than being rich. We should perceive goals for exploring our capabilities and not for any end result because the end result of all achievements is to feel good psychologically and that we can achieve by just applying psychological patches mentioned above. Moreover, if we have achieved psychological greatness, no end result should matter because only then we are more important than our outcomes. In the same way like in the example mentioned above, we can apply psychological patches to almost every problem. All we need to do that is to have the supporting knowledge. The supporting knowledge comes mostly from the study of mind, nature of the universe and likely purposes of higher powers.

Following are the other books previously written by me in the listing of chronological order.

1. Guide to Awakening (Published in May 2017), is about the principle aspects of spirituality.
2. Intelligence Demystified (Published in September 2017), is about human intelligence.
3. Dynamics of Human Life (Published in April 2018), is about relationship between various aspects of life, their purposes and purpose for human life.

4. Words of Wisdom (Published in December 2020), is about how to gain wisdom.
5. Psychological Facts (Published in June 2021), is a compilation of different documents written by me.
6. Random Blogs (Published in January 2023): When I started writing blogs in my website, I realized these topics could be an interesting content for a new book. The contents of my blogs became the book and hence the name of the book.
7. Comprehensive Mental Upgrade, (Published in July 2024), contains my new findings about suggestions and affirmations for mental inputs that are necessary for a comprehensive mental upgrade.
8. You are what you decide, (Published in November 2024), reveals how the numerous small decisions that we take affect our lives and how to start deciding well even during challenging situations.
9. We Live in the Illusion, (Published in July 2025), is about my latest realization about the exact nature of illusion of life. It talks about the nature of illusion of our life and their side effects. This is a real eye opener.

My closing remark is that the purpose of all our achievements is the psychological state and prowess, that we derive from them. However, I would like to state that the same psychological state and prowess can be achieved, without the any worldly accomplishments, by realizing truth alone.

The Video Game of Existence

To look only at external accomplishments is to mistake the rendered graphics of a video game for the ultimate reality. The physical universe is coded entirely from a formless state of consciousness, creating a temporary field of experience. When we consider only the external metrics, we are merely playing the game; but when we turn our gaze internally, we exit the illusion and begin to live fully. By aligning with the source of our own existence, we reclaim our true sovereignty and tap into an unshakeable baseline of bliss.

In other words, "The outside is just the game being rendered. Our consciousness is the formless source where the true reality lives. We need to prepare to seek inside into our natural state of bliss."

DEEPAK RAM

**********