YOU ARE WHAT YOU DECIDE

Deepak Ram

Contents

PROLOGUE 2
INTRODUCTION 6
SECTION I 18
Chapter I Major aspects of life 19
SECTION II 41
Chapter II Nature of mind 42
Chapter III Nature of world and life 47
Chapter IV Conflicting objectives in life 57
SECTION III 59
Chapter V Mental Inputs 60
CONCLUSION 145

PROLOGUE

We are what we decide and the world is designed to make our decisions incorrect. The major objective of this book is to realize the above statement to our advantage of being self improving and composed. For example if with a firm belief I am able to reckon that no one is luckier than me and always stay with that reckoning, I will be one of the luckiest person on earth. To have that firm belief we need provide mental inputs for our intelligence to realize that. This book is all about how to decide for our best.

One may think, "I agree I am lucky. I will keep saying that every day". Now I don't need the book. However, repeating this one statement will not work. To have a firm belief we need to either be convinced logically about the statement or have faith on person who said that. Moreover, every now and then something negative will happen to us and we will feel unlucky. Therefore, unless mind is under control and gradually improved upon such affirmations will not work. We keep getting various types of trains of thought and we decide on them based on plain logic or based on our psychological condition of desire, fear, ego or pleasure seeking. Our logical mind is erroneous due to numerous gaps in intelligence. We need to cover the gaps in intelligence first otherwise the affirmations will not work. Therefore a well researched methodology is needed to achieve the seemingly simple objective.

Following are some major objectives which we will achieve from studying this book.

1. We will start feeling lucky and everything happening will start looking good.
2. We become very intelligent by developing a habit for self improvement.
3. There is nothing personal about us. Everything that happens is just happening as per the universal plan. Therefore our worries, insecurities, pain, challenges and misfortunes are not personal but expression of the stories conceptualized by the universal soul.
4. The ultimate objective one can achieve is to keep deciding that each one of us is a uniform soul and this world is the imagination of the souls. Therefore each one of us is equal with different roles and unique circumstances.

5. We will realize that we are the souls that never die. The death we know about is actually the expression of the soul while changing from one body to another in a different environment. In fact after each term we all progress to higher level.

However to achieve this we need to first fine tune our minds and make it more pliable. This is done by mental inputs which reduce the gaps in our intelligence. This is the same way as exercises are done in any sport. In other words, a comprehensive mental upgrade is needed to realize this simple statement. An open mind is all that is needed to take advantage of this book.

Cycle of realizations:

Following are the relative importance of realizations which we should progressively try to achieve.

A) Selfish realizations:

Realizing importance of health is more important than realizing importance of wealth. Realizing the importance of psychological strength or wealth is more important than realizing importance of physical health.

B) Unselfish realizations:

Realizing importance of story content in everyday life is more important than realizing importance of psychological strength or wealth. Realizing equality in everyone and everything is more important than realizing story content. Realizing the nature of reality and self realization help us to realize oneness and equality. When sizable population realizes oneness and equality, the world will be restarted. However, a fair degree of genuineness in our conduct is important for maintaining sustainable interest by the citizen.

INTRODUCTION

The most important factor that affects the quality of our lives is the quality of the decisions that we make at every point of life. As the complexities in life are increasing the quality of our decisions become more and more important. The decisions are not only about how we act but also about how we perceive. The quality of decisions depends on our knowledge base and the priority of information in the knowledge base.

In the very olden days, man had to search only for food, water and shelter. Today even when many have these and much more are available to most of us, we are unhappy. Moreover due to competition we all need to look to upgrade ourselves to feel comfortable about ourselves and to remain competitive. There are two broad areas for upgrading ourselves. First one is to understand and develop the external things and processes and the second one is to understand and develop our mental processes. The improvement of our mental processes helps in improving external processes and features also.

To upgrade in both endeavors we need to improve our decisions. The core of this book is to understand how decisions are influenced by our intelligence and our intelligence is influenced by our decisions and how to continually improve either of them to remain competitive and happy. As we all know the thoughts, feelings, decisions and actions are the main functions of the mind. As we also know, the thoughts and feelings are involuntary where as the decisions and actions are voluntary. The decisions that we take affect the thoughts, feelings and actions. Most of our unhappiness is due to our wrong decisions. This is because we feel unhappy, sad, angry or frustrated when some negative things happen only due to our decisions. Based on our priorities in life we are strongly prompted by our minds to decide about some things and we then decide to act based on the instincts. To change our instincts we need to change our priorities by starting to provide right priorities during perceptions for some period of time. This is done by mental inputs. Our quality of decisions about the thoughts, feelings and actions act as the throttle to increase or decrease the intensity of perceptions based on the importance we give to the thoughts, feelings or actions. These decisions become part of our intelligence. Many times we suffer due to impulsive endorsements (or unmindful decisions) of our involuntary thoughts and feelings. Even the slightest discomfort from our thoughts and feelings can be corrected by developing right habits of perceptions. We don’t have to feel negative to deal with an unsuitable situation. We can be doing our best in any adverse situation with a feeling of joy, if we have mentally prepared for that situation. It is only due to incorrect decisions that result from incorrect priorities (due to our limited knowledge), that we feel unhappy when some adversity happens. Our decisions depend on our intelligence. The involuntary thoughts and feelings are implemented in such a way that they present challenging situations that affect our intelligence. Moreover, due to fear and greed we tend to give exaggerated importance to certain aspects of lives, which make us think about the past or worry about the future and make us oblivious of certain other important aspects relevant for our present decisions. Our intelligence is vastly dependent on our past perceptions, which can be gradually corrected by our present intelligent decisions. There are two types of corrective decisions. One is to question what is happening which prompts us to find relevant facts. The other type of decision is the affirmations that lead to right perceptions resulting in right thoughts, feelings and actions. In other words, our intelligence can be developed by two types of decisions viz. decisions to ask and decisions to affirm. Most of us fall short of intelligence due to lack of development of the process of mental questioning and mental inputs. Habits for both questioning and mental inputs can be developed by proper mental inputs. When our intelligence is developed by the process of questioning and mental inputs, all the functions of the mind keeps progressing.

There are numerous gaps in our intelligence, which make our happiness fleeting and our decisions erroneous. Our thoughts are the interactions of two processes in the mind. One is the automatic thought propagation from the mind, which does not know what is right or wrong. This process is not a part of our intelligence. The other process is the thoughts initiated by our wills that include our endorsement of the automatic thoughts from the mind, our conscious mental inputs and conscious questioning from deep memory. The thoughts initiated by our wills form our memories that are available for our conscious questioning. Those who do not know about this mechanism do not question the automatic thoughts propagated by the mind and take incorrect decisions based on them.

The first step in upgradation of intelligence is the understanding of the difference between knowledge and intelligence. Knowledge is simply about knowing things. Things are known to us when they are in our active memory or in the memory base. When we talk of intelligence, it is actually applying the logic and priority on the knowledge possessed by us by means of questioning and deciding about the course of action to be taken. Therefore, two things become important in developing the intelligence. They are the knowledge base and the questioning. The content, order and priorities of perception in our knowledge base are very important. The purpose of mental inputs is to create a proper knowledge base in our minds. The knowledge base that is provided in this book is the knowledge base to improve the intelligence. For innovations in a specific field we need to acquire knowledge base in that field in addition to the knowledge base for intelligence. Our life solely depends on where our focus or the attention is at different points of life. If we focus on providing proper mental inputs to our minds, our knowledge base will improve. If we focus on questioning our perceptions with gentle intensity, our intelligence will improve. The combination will lead to Innovations in the area of mental inputs and questioning.

So far, I have mentioned about the science of decisions. At first we need to realize the science part. After realizing sufficient success and happiness we need to look at a bigger perspective. We should then start to look beyond ourselves and from holistic perspective how to make a better world. We need to understand that making interesting stories for our higher powers to witness is one of the important aspects for our overall welfare. I do not have enough expertise in this art. Therefore I will not be able to say more about this. My purpose of mentioning this to understand why there are so much negative things happening in this world. Without negative aspects there wont the enough stories to sustain the interests of our higher powers. When we accept that there is justification for negative aspects we tend to downplay them to the extent that without feeling negative about them we will respond with the right intensity when these negative aspects happen to us.

More about decision making

1. Decisions are based on intelligence and intelligence is based on past decisions. Decisions are made every other moment either involuntarily or mindfully. Involuntary decisions are based on habits formed and higher powers' prodding. Mindful decisions can take extra considerations based on questioning our intelligence. Unmindful decisions make part of habits and the conscious decisions make part of intelligence.

2. Two things matter about our decisions. What we decide at this moment and quality of the decision at this moment.

3. Decisions are based on our understanding and conclusions there upon. These are based on the priorities we have in life. Based on the priorities our mind prods us to the decisions with intensities according to the level of priorities.

4. Many significant aspects related to the issue are often neglected while deciding. This happens due to not being able to consider some aspects and giving too much importance to some aspects relevant to the issue. Our mind also makes a wild guess whenever sufficient information is not available and such guesses are often erroneous.

5. Our targets to achieve should be arrived at based on different criteria like credit system in colleges and our decisions should be based on appropriate weightage of priorities of different aspects of life. We should also have a mindset to think in terms of probabilities instead of being definitive.

6. We should have mindset that our intelligence is always lacking for generating proper thrust for improvements. Therefore we should always consider that we might be wrong during our decisions. In doing so we may get better solutions immediately or some time later.

7. We should have clear distinction between automatic thoughts of the mind and our conscious decision making. We need to realize that the incoming thoughts are more like suggestions than they are directives to follow. We should just take the hints of the automatic thinking and estimate their usefulness before allowing them to continue or deciding based on them.

8. Developing a researching mind is of paramount importance to improving our intelligence. This happens by two aspects which are questioning for improvement areas along with their solutions and trying out the solutions without considering failures as problematic.

9. Art aspects are to be happy, interesting, humorous, fun loving etc. Science aspects are achieving results like monetary gain, cost economics or loyalty. Balance of the two aspects will lead to balance of sustainability, creativity and genuineness.

10. Mental inputs that develop a way of questioning for improvements and providing proper knowledge base help in improving decisions.

11. Broadly our thinking is of five types. They are wanting something, worrying about something, enjoying something, understanding something or working out something. The real objectives for these types of thinking are happiness, peace, pleasure, knowledge and intelligence respectively. Wanting something when lead to action would generate the drive for further action. When the worries lead to effective action, they would generate the drive to find solutions. Therefore, action is the key. Too much wanting and worrying keep our minds disturbed and therefore they should be avoided. The pleasurable aspects often have side effects and therefore should be restricted for only a few minutes in a day. The bottom line is that achieving peace, knowledge and intelligence should be our major objectives in life. Therefore, meditation, research and self affirmations are the keys to attain right decisions.

Reasons for poor decision making

There are two main reasons for our poor decision making. They are incorrect priorities of some aspects of life and lack of knowledge of some aspects of life. The incorrect priorities come mostly from our attachments which manifests as desires, fears and ego. The lack of knowledge comes mostly from lack of understanding of how our minds work, lack of understanding of nature of the world and lack of understanding of higher purposes in life.

Methodology for improving decisions

The first step in improving decisions is to understand how to reduce our attachments including, desires, fears and ego and have right perceptions about some psychological aspects like happiness, self worth, confidence, intelligence, including handling challenges and misfortunes. The first section of the book covers the first step.

The second step in improving decisions step would be to understand the nature of our mind, the nature of the world and the higher purposes in life. The second section of the book covers the second step.

The third step in improving decisions would be to provide proper mental inputs to our minds for right questioning and right knowledge base for intelligence. The first two steps help us in preparing the mental inputs for sound decision making. The third section of the book covers the third step.

SECTION I

In this section we will cover the right perceptions about desire, fear, ego, happiness, expectations, challenges and misfortunes.

Chapter I Major aspects of life

To improve our decisions we should have the right perceptions about the major aspects that affect our decision making.

Desires

Desires are manifestation of our attractions to various aspects of life. These form strong attachments to people, places, objects and events. The desires that we have, manifest as attachments to wealth, family, comforts, luxury, knowledge, beauty, power, recognition and long and healthy life. Our desires lead to expectations and will lead to discontentment when the expectations are not fulfilled. When our expectations are fulfilled the happiness is temporary due to more expectations and other issues. Moreover, we will realize that the desires and fulfillment are illusionary and not real. The happiness that we attain when we get what we desire is not due to things we attain. The happiness is due to our intensity of perception. Therefore we can gradually train our minds to be happy for the things that we have and increase the happy moments. However being very happy has some side effects. Happiness keeps our mind very excited and therefore affects our intelligence. Therefore to be contented is a better objective than to be happy. We need fewer things to be contended than to be happy. Even if we want to be happy it is better to feel happy about small improvements here and there, rather than from our desires to attain an end result.

Our desires and when they are excessive they lead to incorrect perceptions, which in turn lead to our giving too much importance to the aspects we desire and neglecting other equally important aspects. This results in skewed intelligence. At their right levels all desires are useful. Moreover, some desires help us more than others. If we desire to be smiling irrespective of circumstances, it is a good desire. Desire to put in our best efforts in our endeavors is a good desire. The desire to look for equality among all people is a good desire. The desire to seek happiness in life is good desire. Problem is when we desire particular results which are not in our control like marks in exams, promotion in career or profit in business. Such things depend on various factors and such desires affect our thinking and cause stress. A small measure of desire of such things cause motivation and an excess of these desires cause disappointments, stress and affect intelligence. We are not ready to get what we desire because our desires only get factored in our decision making. However, for right decisions we need more things than just desires. For example there has to be considerations for peace, consideration for others, consideration for facts, consideration for decorum, consideration for logic, consideration for acceptance of higher desires, consideration for priorities and perspectives along with the desire to progress. For many people, the strong desires and fears make them overlook the other necessary aspects needed for sound decision making. In other words it is desirable to have right desires, at the right intensities, in the right times of our lives.

The best way to overcome our desires is by daily affirmations like the following statements.

‘I do not need anything and I am contended with what I will get from the discretion of higher powers. I will only strive to improve upon the aspects that are possible by me. All our desires are illusions and do not actually provide permanent satisfaction on attainment'

Fears

Fears are manifestation of our repulsions to various aspects of life. The fears that we have affect our physical and mental health and not allow us to take right decisions in life. Some of the main fears are the fear of losing health, wealth and family. Most of the fears are illusionary or exaggerated and may not happen in real. When fears are at the right level they make us take action towards enhancing security aspects in our lives. However when the fears are excessive, they cause worries and anxiety. We need to identify all our fears and work on them individually. The action on them may be a change in perception or doing something to prevent what we fear. In other words, we should deal with our fear by having faith in our higher powers and also doing our bit to secure ourselves from the aspects we fear about.

The best way to overcome fear is by daily affirmations like the following statements

'I do not need to fear anything because I will try my best to secure myself and beyond that it is as per the discretion of higher powers to protect me. I do not want to spoil my present moment worrying about the future. I would rather ensure to be as secure as possible and concentrate on what I want to achieve in life'

Ego

Ego is the manifestation of our identification with self. Our ego increases the intensity of our desires and fears. We need to understand that everything that is happening is happening to the universe and is not personal.

The best way to get rid of our ego is by daily affirmations like the following statements.

'I am just a drop in the ocean and I am not substantial individually. Nothing is personal about me. I can only contribute to the ocean by doing my little bit'

Happiness, love and bliss

When we are happy about getting something, we give more importance to getting that thing than to be happy, thinking that getting that thing made us happy. Therefore, when we lose such a thing we become unhappy. Therefore, we can remain happy if our priority for being happy is more than anything that may happen. How much a particular aspect of life gives us happiness and the duration of happiness are dependent on the amount of importance we give to that aspect. Similarly how much unhappiness a particular aspect of life makes us and duration of sadness are dependent on the importance we give to that aspect. Therefore to maximize happiness we should have gratitude for what we have and reduce the importance of what we lack. We should also downplay our problems so that they do not overwhelm us.

One more thing that we can do to remain happy is to decide on something which will always happen and will give us maximum happiness.

For example we can daily contemplate with firm belief that the passing of a day gives maximum happiness. When we do that, we will frequently realize the passing of a day with enhanced happiness. This happiness will gradually overshadow everything else. This type of contemplation leads to a very gradual change but will be very effective.

Happiness, love and bliss are similar states, with differences in reasons for the state and degree of their fleeting characteristic. To be continually blissful, we need to either perceive everything as blissful or our attention should be always on something blissful. While the first one is difficult as in this case we need to change our ways of perception, the second one is practically impossible as our mind continually brings in new thoughts, where our attention goes automatically. We could try a combination of both the approaches. In this, while we try to perceive everything as blissful, we also try to bring back our attention to something that is permanently blissful. When the reason for the bliss is an external state, it is more fleeting than when it is for an internal state. When the reason for bliss is for the internal state associated with body or mind it is more fleeting than when the reason for bliss is at the state of intelligence. However, to achieve continual bliss based on our intelligence, it takes very long time as in this case we need to undertake philosophical practices to upgrade our entire cumulative impressions in our memories.

One of the important things to achieve is to love everything around as they are. The things that block us from realizing true love are our likes and dislikes. Real love is experienced when we realize equality mindset. Our selective likes and dislikes are impurities in our mindsets, which create attraction and repulsion. The attraction and repulsion give rise to wants and aversions. When a mind with wants and aversions come across unexpected facets of reality, the state of bliss gets disturbed. To achieve a continual state of bliss we need to work on every aspect that could break a state of bliss. Our mind should be trained to perceive all those aspects as good.

Love with a reason is not the true as loving with a reason is actually loving some aspect of our desires than the person, thing or any other external or internal state. You do not need a person to love. Its all in the mindset. The closest word to love is to admire and that of pleasure is to want. When you admire something which changes its state then our state of happiness will also change accordingly. Therefore we should choose to admire something that remains the same for our lifespan. One such thing is continuous passing of time. When you admire fully there is no space for want. When you fully want something there is no space for admiration. True love comes from our sufficiency and yet something to admire about. When we are not sufficient it is a combination of want and admire and therefore is just a glimpse of admiration and desire. When the admiration comes from sufficiency it has a higher position than wanting. We progress from higher levels of want to higher levels of love.

In summary, to be continually blissful, we need to either perceive everything as blissful or our attention should be always on something blissful. We are happy or sad by an event only because we give more importance to that event than to being happy or sad and paint the event as happy or sad based on our priorities in life. In other words we will be always happy if we could change the priority for being happy to be more than anything that may happen. This requires regular contemplation on the priorities which we wish to have. One way of doing this is to imagine about all the things that made us unhappy in the past and perceive them as they were for our good by smiling through. This will change our mindsets about those situations and will enable us to be happy when these situations come by in future. When we truly love a person we see our reflection in that person. In that state there is no difference between us and our surroundings. To achieve this state a lifetime of philosophical practice may be needed. The bottom line is that happiness is a decision and to take that decision we need to do regular affirmations.

Self-worth and confidence

Our self-worth should be such that we nether reckon ourselves neither inferior nor superior to anyone. Such a perception is possible if we think all are equal. We need to understand and realize that we are carrying out roles in life based on the plan of our higher powers. The plan of this world is not on the basis of perfect roles for everyone but of seriously interesting ones with lots of nuances and incremental changes. Those people who have higher achievements have it due to the kind of roles they are playing and for the roles they are playing. They are able to achieve their goals due to the support they get for the roles they are playing. Moreover, our higher powers don't give importance to only the achievers. The apparently non-achievers are significantly important for the maintenance of the ecosystem and for their story content. Therefore, we all have the same worth in the eyes of the highest powers.

In summary, we need to realize that considering all our circumstances and the belief that god is fair for everyone, we are all equal in terms of our worth.

Confidence doesn't come from surety of success alone. It comes from the realization of our sufficiency to handle the situation. We need to develop ourselves to feel sufficient besides preparing ourselves for the tasks in hand. Confidence comes from true self-worth when it is independent of any outcome. We need to realize that failure is a part of life and not get attached to success alone. Confidence comes when we reckon that nothing really is at stake. When results do not matter and giving your best shot only matters. Giving too much importance to others affects our own confidence. We should reckon that everything evens out and thus all are equal. Looking for perfection in all matters also affects our confidence. Therefore to gain confidence in facing the situation we need to first downplay the situation and make the situation appear menial and manageable.

In summary, self confidence comes from the realization that we are sufficient for the shot of the scene of the story being directed by our higher powers. We need to only prepare for the future scenes, but for the current scene we are fully sufficient. Our higher powers know us in and out and are sure that we are perfect for the present scene.

The bottom line is that our self worth and confidence are our decisions and to take that decisions we need to do right kind of affirmations on the daily basis.

Intelligence

If our creators wanted they could have made us more intelligent and knowledgeable. It is very clear that their main intention is not to get things done from us for them but to make an interesting world with lots of stories along with sustained learning opportunities for millions of years. Therefore, they have made sure that things are not too easy for us and we need to gradually improve ourselves to understand and master our world. It is because of the same reason that a man with experience can do better that an intelligent novice. The gradual path of learning is planned so that the development of the world is at the right pace and also to enable creation of desired stories. It is because of our creators' plan of slow progress, that we forget what we study and have to do regular practice to remember the subject. One important side effect of the slow learning process is that we will never be able to suggest improvement areas to our creators, who have millions of years of experience. It is the first experience of the world that made our creators the most powerful. Our creators gained immense knowledge and expertise by applying intelligence to the resource of life for billions of years.

Our intelligence can be called as a process of using our will to estimate, analyze and extrapolate the information perceived by the sense organs and the mind. It can also be called as the skill to use our will to enhance our knowledge, expertise, connections and other resources based on logic and the right allocation of time, effort, resources, and people. It is the dynamic processor of the mind. It enhances our knowledge and expertise by questioning the mind for improvements. The quality and quantity of our knowledge depends on our intelligence. Our intelligence is active at every moment in deciding our next thought and action and also in estimating, analyzing and extrapolating the information from sense organs and the mind. Our intelligence decides where our attention points to at the current moment and our knowledge and expertise depend on the time of attention spent in the respective area of knowledge and expertise. In other words intelligence is just processing of memories based on some criteria in another memory location. Similar to in a computer there cannot be any processing or intelligence without memories or knowledge.

There are two aspects in developing intelligence. One is the questioning our mind for improvements and new perspectives, whenever a new thought comes. The other one is spending time on the particular area of interest to acquire incremental and cumulative expertise. The first aspect improves the speed of development and the second one increases the number of reusable solutions. There should be clear discrimination between our propensity for general improvements and the acquired experience to tackle known issues. The first aspect is like sharpening the knife and the second one is learning how to cut different types of vegetable.

One of the areas where our intelligence is usually lacking and needs to be improved is estimating the priority of information. When the priority of some aspects is excessive there is wastage of time and inaccuracy of results. The incorrect priorities are due to character defects that stem from excessive desires, fears and ego. Philosophy is one of the means of correcting the priorities of various aspects of life.

Another area of improving our intelligence is to train our minds to look into depth and width of the issues against availability of time and other resources.

Intelligence is at the best when the mind is peaceful and there is a habit of querying our thoughts, actions and perceptions at the right intensity and frequency.

The bottom line is that our intelligence is based on our past decisions and to improve that we need to provide right mental inputs on the regular basis.

Expectations and fruits of action

We expect all good things to happen to us and fear bad things from happening. But our lives are like roles in the movies, based on the stories scripted by higher powers, and on the needs and capabilities of the individuals. Therefore we should reckon that only a few can get lead roles and also that there may be misfortunes in life which should be handled and coped with. If we wear the shoes of our higher powers we will know what to expect in life.

When we develop good relationship with our children or parents we give more importance to them than ourselves. Similarly when we develop good relations with god we should give more importance to him than ourselves. God wants us to live our lives with the best of our abilities. However, if things do not go according to our expectations it is just because of the stories scripted by god. Therefore when we give right importance to our god we will accept any negative outcomes and perceive misfortunes and failures with sportsmanship. The stories are more important than our individual roles. There is no way god can develop a story where all favorable things are happening to everyone at all times. Surely the experienced god must have some way to maintain fairness, revealing which will affect the script and the stories yet to be directed.

If end result is only important than the final end result of everyone is death only. Therefore the journey or the process should be rejoiced and cherished and not the end result. All our actions are happening from the decisions taken from the priorities by which we tend to perceive the various aspects of life. If all the priorities are well balanced then right actions will result. When right actions match up with right opportunities the right result will happen. Moreover, as mentioned in earlier topics there are five types of wealth. The fruits of our actions may come off in any one of the types of wealth and also to any member of the family any time in the future. In short there may not be a direct and immediate consequence between action and the result. It is believed by many that we should not worry about results and only concentrate on efforts. Although this philosophy is useful, the problem is not the results but about looking for the right results. Looking out for results are no problems if we have the right priorities for important aspects of life. For example if the priority for being a better person is more than the marks in school then we will be satisfied with better me even with fewer marks. We should not look a particular result in isolation but understand how they relate to one another along with the relative priorities of one another. Our expectations from others and from fruits of actions lead to loss of flexibility in our choices in life. Moreover, we need to realize that we plan our actions based on our priorities in life and the higher powers decide about the end results or fruits of our actions based on their own priorities.

In summary, we should have realistic expectations, along with those for negative results. We should focus on the things on which we have control, and let the higher powers decide about the end result. To be free from frustration and disappointments, we need to do some research about the likely causes of frustration and disappointments and try to have some acceptance about them. We need to realize that in such a vast world, with many centuries of progression, there will be myriad ways that circumstances may crop up for anybody and depending on the individual story, all possibilities of both positive and negative outcomes exist for anyone. We panic from adversities only due to not preparing ourselves mentally for the negative outcomes that can crop up from any situation, any time, for anybody.

The bottom line is that our expectations are our decisions and to control that we need to provide right kind of mental inputs on a regular basis.

Challenges and Misfortunes

Challenges and misfortunes are internal and external constraints imposed on us to induce the right level of difficulties in order to make our lives interesting to us and to the observer. There is value for our accomplishments only due to the difficulties faced in achieving success. The challenges in life are very important for us. Without the challenges life will soon start to become boring. There cannot be any psychological growth in us without the challenges faced by us. For example if we imagine staying in the same grade for three or four years, we will realize how life will become boring without challenges. Thus higher challenges virtually keep us growing in higher grades. We do not appreciate the challenges only because our focus is too much on the end result. Facing challenges successfully give us the thrill and experience. We just need to shift our attention from results to the pleasure of handling them. The misfortunes in our lives provide challenges that help us to grow psychologically. Psychological wealth is gained from experience of meeting challenges. Thus there is a component of goodness in misfortunes. Challenges and misfortunes provide opportunities for learning and improvements which enables attainment of satisfaction and fulfillment in life. Challenges and misfortunes also provide surprise elements in our lives for the purpose of having some seriousness and suspense in the world. Moreover, without challenges and misfortunes it is not possible to create lots of stories. Personal growth along with challenges and misfortunes provide the direction for story lines needed for sustained interest for the observers.

To face challenges and misfortunes properly we need to learn to perceive them correctly. When our attention is on blaming someone or feeling dejected rather than finding solutions, we lose the time and opportunity for learning to handle and growing from such situations. Therefore our first response to challenging situations and misfortunes should be that of acceptance. We need to reckon that the primary objective of our lives is to be part of an interesting story. In a story all situations are justified.

The bottom line is that we usually get it wrong about what we should accept and what we should question. We should accept what happens outside of us and question what happens in our minds, instead of our natural tendency to do the other way around. Our acceptance of challenges and misfortunes are the decisions which we can develop by right kind of mental inputs on a regular basis.

SECTION II

In this section we will cover the nature of mind, the nature of life and the higher purposes in life.

Chapter II Nature of mind

From this chapter we need to realize two things. They are as follows:

1. We should have clear distinction between automatic thoughts of the mind and our conscious decision making. We need to realize that the incoming thoughts are more like suggestions than they are directives to follow. We should just take the hints of the automatic thinking and estimate their usefulness before allowing them to continue or deciding based on them.
2. We need to provide regular proper mental inputs to improve our intelligence. This is a long drawn process as it needs to gradually invalidate the previous incorrect impressions in the memory.

Mind does the job of thinking and deciding based on the priorities we have maintained for various aspects of life. Firm opinions or exaggerated priorities for various aspects are formed when a mind with high level of desires, fears and ego perceive the various aspects of life. Due to high intensity of perceptions during such cases, our intelligence becomes skewed and our mental bandwidth gets clogged from repeated thinking. Therefore, to start having some control over our minds we need to practice to perceive everything with lower intensity so that our thoughts do not overpower us.

Thought Management:

We need to realize and remember that thoughts initiated by our wills are different from the automatic thoughts of the mind. Only the thoughts that are initiated by our wills are stored in permanent memory, and only such thoughts become part of our intelligence. The thoughts initiated by our wills are the endorsements by the will of the incoming thoughts, answers to conscious questioning the mind, the conscious contemplation by the will and the conscious reading by the will, from an external source. Thoughts that automatically come from the minds are from a different database. Such thoughts come as extrapolation by the mind of information derived from our sense perceptions or from previous perceptions of high intensity. These extrapolations by the mind serve various purposes. Sometimes their purpose is to create interesting stories. At other times great insights come through these. These also challenge us many times by misguided extrapolations that test our intelligence. Therefore, we need to keep improving our intelligence, as a process, which is separate from the incoming processes of the mind. We need to just take the hints from the incoming processes of the mind and evaluate them correctly by means of deep and calm questioning.

There are three main areas where our memories are stored.

a) Automatic regular thoughts come from thought priority queue. These come from our creators' intelligence as an extrapolation of information perceived by our sense organs or from our memories.

b) Our mental inputs and deep reasoning happen from the permanent memory. These are initiated by our wills. Mental inputs are like thinking about or reading about some important statements which improve our cumulative impressions of memories. Deep reasoning is referred to as questioning our minds for improvements and finding possible defects in our existing ways.

c) Thoughts that form our habits come from habit maps. These thoughts are stored along with habit cues and they trigger when the cuing conditions happen.

For effective thought management, we need to learn to perceive things with less importance or priority so that the thoughts from thought priority queue do not overwhelm us. We need to involve more with mental inputs and deep reasoning and just get the hints from priority queue and habit maps. While our minds keep popping up interesting and unreal stories from priority queue, we need to change our attention to where it is advantageous to us by questioning our mind on what is really important to do at this moment. To get the right answers to these questions we should have provided the mind with suitable mental inputs about the priorities and principles we wish to inculcate.

Chapter III Nature of world and life

From this chapter we need to realize three things. They are as follows:

1. This world is a virtual reality or an illusion and should not be taken very seriously. All our difficulties seem exaggerated due to our nature of taking things seriously.
2. We are all uniform souls, who are expressing ourselves as unique patterns which appear to be the life. The actual life is only experienced by our soul. Our bodies are the imagination of the soul, which never dies.
3. This world is an all-pervading, single life entity, which can be called 'The Being'. This can change patterns in its memory space and experience projected imaginary sense perceptions based on the patterns. This is explained as follows:

A form can't make another life form but only a formless can create an illusion of life form because if it was a form that created another form, the creator form cannot test the feelings of external life form. Such a majestic, intricate and vast system cannot be developed without proper testing. It is possible to incorporate some tested feelings from one life part to another life part of the system, only if there can be some kind transfer of the tested patterns from one part to another. This is only possible by a formless process, because, the parts that are tested and parts that are being tested should be identical for the testing to be practical. Therefore entire reality is uniform in nature. In other words there is a single, uniform, all-pervading entity and all other things that is perceived is an illusion.

Another reason for the presence of a single entity is that a seamless and perfect integration in such an intricate, complex and perfect world is possible only if it is a single life entity. Anything else present anywhere is not a part of our universe.

One more proof for our universe being a formless source of our existence is that if a form has to be designed by another form then the question about who decided about the shape of the first being becomes illogical. Therefore, the source of our existence is a formless entity.

Furthermore, if this universe were a single entity, which can see, feel, and think, then the vision, feelings and thoughts have to be just imaginations, because there is nothing else other than the single entity. It has to look only within itself. There is another aspect besides the imaginations. That is consciousness of imagination by some other part of the being. This consciousness part when switches consciousness between various imagining parts of a specific being in a time sharing algorithm, it gives an illusion of being the form. Without this feature there cannot be simultaneous activities of seeing, hearing, tasting, feeling and smelling in a being. These activities happen based on some impressions or codes in the being. One part of the being is responsible for writing codes or impressions and sending them to all parts, which are programmed to act as per the codes.

The codes and transmission techniques are probably developed from self awareness. Thus there are three facets to 'The Being'. They are consciousness, impressions, and imaginations. It is similar to a computer, which has many inputs spaces, which create and read patterns or impressions in its memory space, many processor spaces which translate impressions into code and vice versa and many output spaces, which through imagination converts the code into objects of the world. The computers like feature use the impressions and imaginations aspects. The other important aspect is the consciousness which witnesses the imaginations of other parts of the being, in a time sharing algorithm. When we see something it is consciousness of some sort of imagination of the pictures formed by some other the part of 'The Being'. The objects seen behind a mirror clearly proves that our vision is an imagination in the sense that we see something which is not there at that position. Similarly sounds we hear can only be thought of as consciousness by one part of being of imaginations of sound by some other part of the being. Similarly the pains we suffer are consciousness of one part of the being of some kind of imagination of some other part of the being. The hints for our vision, feelings and thoughts to being imaginary, is our dreams in which we see, feel and think, totally different from when we are awake. Only in an imagination such changes in perceptions of reality is possible.

One part of the being can be in one of the three states, a state of being an impression, an imagining state or a state of being in conscious of some other state. The three states are like being in a state of being part of a pattern, being in a state of looking internally to imagine the stuff based on the state of patterns and looking externally at other memory spaces which are looking internally to imagine the stuff, based on the patterns.

In summary, this universe is a single life entity, which has three facets, viz. consciousness, imaginations and impressions. Moreover, if I simultaneously perceive vision, thoughts and feelings, then I am definitely being aware of three different parts in a time sharing algorithm.

More details about this is provided in the next topic, 'who am I, explained'.

Who am I, explained

We have learnt in the last topic, 'The nature of life', that this universe is a single life entity, which can be called 'The Being'. Now the question arises 'who am I?' At one level there is just 'the being' and everything else is an illusion. However, logically we are just the part of consciousness attached to the individual will, as it is what through which we experience the world. Each part of 'The being', that has a separate will, is an individual entity, experiencing different realities. Moreover, the impressions of the decisions of the individual wills, although they are stored in separate memory space, are like its appendage, because, till the individual entity is bound to the 'human being', these memories form the intelligence of the individual entity. Therefore I am the conscious will with some memories attached.

I cannot be something which was created by someone else. Therefore, I am that part of the being that creates something and that which was not created by someone else. My body and mind are created by someone else (god) and so those are not me. The free will, attached to my body always existed in the space assigned to my body. So I am the part of 'the being' (consciousness) which is attached to my will.

This world is joint collaboration of the will of god, our individual wills and the features already present in 'the being'. Nothing can be made from nothing. So 'The being' always existed. The only thing that differentiates me from the creator (god) is their privilege to access and edit the impressions of all of memory spaces. The other memory spaces like me are only programmed to witness the sense perceptions, thoughts and feelings and make decisions about them. In other words, the other memory spaces do not know that they have free will. Before they could know about their free will, they are sabotaged by the creator memory space, such that the other memory spaces do not have time to experiment and discover themselves.

I am just one autonomous memory space in 'the being', which is programmed to witness and decide about what is being projected by some other memory spaces. I make my decisions based on the priorities maintained in a distinct memory space of 'The Being'. What I see, feel, hear, taste and smell are the projections of different autonomous memory spaces of 'the being', about which I am programmed to be continually aware. There are three main features of the human mind. They are vision, thoughts and sense perceptions. The vision is some sort of imaginative projection based on a database of impressions at some other memory space. The hearing, smell, taste, pain and other feelings are related to the imaginations of sense perceptions by the memory spaces in the space covered by our body. The thoughts are continuous semantic interpretations of the perceptions and other impressions, along with some extrapolation. There is one memory space for visual aspects, one for thought process and few others for feelings. I am the memory space being conscious of these different memory spaces based on a register, similar to a CPU register, with a small window to decide about the thoughts provided to me. In a single entity with multiple facets (impressions, consciousness and imagination) without time sharing of consciousness with imaginations of different memory spaces, such a world is not possible.

In summary, I am just a will representing a part of consciousness, in an autonomous memory area of 'the being', which regularly becomes aware of the imagination of vision by a different part, along with the imagination of thought processes and feelings by some other parts, which are programmed to appear to be coming from a human being, in a time sharing algorithm. I am not anything else or the complete human being, because, I can be only be that part, over which I have total control, and that which was not made by some other part.

Chapter IV Conflicting objectives in life

In this topic we will realize how our individual objectives are conflicting with each other and also with the objectives of higher powers.

For most people success is everything. Their entire self-worth and contentment depend on the level of their success. However, we need to realize that the entire economy is managed in such a way that only few people will be successful. This is because if everyone becomes successful then there won't be anyone to appreciate or envy those who are successful. Moreover, there won't be many stories in life if everything is easy and all are successful. If success doesn't come for such people discontentment sets in.

Besides success we all want happiness and pleasures in life. However, our lives are planned and managed in such a way that very few people can be happy and delightful. This is because of other more important objectives of our higher powers like providing challenges and creating interesting stories in life. If success doesn’t come for people who expect happiness and pleasures, very quickly discontentment sets in. We have seen that lack of success or happiness leads to discontentment. Therefore, contentment should also be one of our major objectives.

Therefore, we need to balance our drive for success and happiness with drive for contentment. This needs intelligence. Therefore our primary objective should be to increase our level of intelligence in a way that we are trying to improve our processes and improve our perceptions. The indirect benefit would be success and contentment. The problem with happiness and pleasures is that it is not sustainable and will lead to discontentment. Happiness or pleasure should come very little and should be a by-product of our stories in life and should be treated like a necessary evil.

SECTION III

SELF AFFIRMATIONS OR MENTAL INPUTS

Chapter V Mental Inputs

Mental inputs are the most important aspects for a improving our intelligence and decision making capability. Without proper mental inputs we cannot verify the incoming thoughts of the mind. Regular practice of mental inputs is the primary way for fixing the defects of our minds.

Some of us might have noticed that even after knowing the facts about some aspects like happiness, anger, pleasures, healthy food, wasteful activities et cetera, we are unable to make right choices. This is due to habits which are formed from the priorities of perceptions of the past. Our mind computes some values from all our past perceptions and suggests options to us with intensities based on the computed values. If the mind suggests a single strong option from the deep memory, there is nothing to verify and we will go by the option. Moreover, we have the habit to go by what the mind suggests. For the mind to give us correct option, we need to have our memories sorted out. If we have to make an effective change in the past perceptions, we should make repeated inputs over long periods of time based on the level of existing defects. Doing mental inputs with high intensities may lead to side effects and unsettled mind. Therefore we need to depend on only the repetitions. Therefore, the key to mental inputs for mental upgrade is repetition.

Following are some affirmations which we could provide as mental inputs to our minds in a regular way. Readers are suggested to have a smaller list initially to make it more effective. They may choose the ones which are more effective for them individually depending of intensity of defects. However, for a comprehensive mental upgrade all of the affirmations in the list are very useful. Before getting into this section it is better to understand and clear all doubts about the nature of the universe, nature of mental intelligence and higher perspectives in life. This is because for many of the items there are no reasons mentioned in the affirmations and a firm conviction is needed for them to work effectively. Some of the affirmations are repeated, which intended to be so for better effects. All the suggestions and affirmations are derived from our objectives of improvements in intelligence, happiness, calmness and other psychological qualities. I have categorized the suggestions and affirmation to use them as per the individual needs. If we are able to pick up the suggestions and affirmations that are more relevant to us based on our strengths and weaknesses then it is the half work done. Mental inputs will be more effective when the list of suggestions and affirmations are small, more relevant and more frequently practiced.

FOR SUCCESS AND INTELLIGENCE

• Automated thoughts are not my thoughts. They are from our creator's intelligence.

• There are many defects in the automatic thoughts of the mind.

• Self inputs and calm questioning are my real thoughts.

• It's all about our right priorities of perceptions. Prioritize process over end results. Prioritize gratitude over desires. Prioritize focusing on solutions over problems. Prioritize understanding over conclusion. Prioritize questioning over conclusion. Prioritize process over personality. Prioritize efforts over results.

• Your attention is the most scarce and precious resource that you have. Be very prudent with it.

• If your attention is on problem there is problem. If your attention is on finding a solution, you will find a solution. If attention is on gratitude, there is happiness. If attention is on your achievement, there is success.

• Psychological wealth is the most important wealth. It ensures happiness, contentment and intelligence.

• Time is a very precious resource. Do not spend the entire of it to maximize anything.

• Your energy level when you are young is very precious. Use it to develop knowledge and skills.

• Success depends on your level of perceptions. Perceive well and succeed.

• If you have failed many times even after trying hard and you have incrementally learnt from your failures, then you are in the right path.

• Success comes from incremental practice in the job. Persistence is the key.

• Small steps taken regularly leads to great success.

• Learning of many failures is better than a few successes.

• A thorough analysis of many failures will lead to great success.

• There is success or failure in most of our thoughts. Therefore, be more conscious of your thoughts.

• We need to understand which mindsets of us are impediments to success.

• Mindsets created from successes and failures have side effects. Study and correct their impacts.

• Humility should be developed due to equality and not due to vulnerability.

• Self-confidence should be realized due to equality and not due to our achievements.

• For a strong person, struggling life is better than one with full of achievements.

• Everything we perceive is in terms of feelings. We can draw those feelings irrespective of the situation with regular practice of mental inputs.

• Initially we are what our environment develops us into. After we become knowledgeable we should become what is the best for us.

• Everything appears as we perceive. To change the world, change your perceptions.

• Keep saying that I don't know anything. Lesser you feel you know, the more you will learn.

• We are made imperfect by design. Perfect world is uninteresting and unsustainable.

• Being very rich is not desirable. Being content and trying to manage with what is possible is desirable. Perceive to be rich in thoughts.

• Maximum number of good moments is all that I want. Wealth cannot assure that; only my way of perceptions can help to achieve this.

• Whenever someone says or does something first try to understand all reasons and implications and not just our profit or loss.

• Like what you do, more than its outcome. Our perceptions are in our hands but not the outcomes.

• Give more priority to the subject you are learning, than to the ambitions. If you do well in understanding and practicing the subject, the results will come automatically.

• Whenever we think of a solution to a problem, we stop looking about it further if we find a problem in that solution. We should try few levels further and solve the recurring problems.

• Whenever we find a small difficulty in our routine job, instead of accepting previous solution, try to think about possible solutions. There is usually a way out.

• If you believe there is a solution to all problems, small or big, you are more likely to search for them. Obviously, when you search for a solution you are more likely to find them than accepting the problem situation.

• The affirmation that I will find solution to even the smallest of problems may help maintain the drive for innovation.

• Understanding and questioning should go immediately one after the other. Understanding without questioning or questioning without understanding are meaningless. When we conclude or judge the matter, both understanding and questioning stops.

• Accept the coming of the problem. But do not accept its longer stay. There is always a solution.

• We react to the situations due to the wrong decisions made in the past and not due to what has happened now.

• Everything in this world is based on rigorous mathematical calculation and research by our creators. Such a universe is not possible without research and development.

• There is always a better way. Keep questioning gently for better ways. This will lead to improvements mindset.

• Giving too much importance to the end result or anything that is happening now, may affect our decision making.

• Being flexible is the most underrated quality. Having rigid mindsets may get one into lots of trouble.

• One of the major mistakes in decision making is stopping the questioning for solutions and concluding too early.

• Regular mental inputs are the means to correct the memories of our incorrect decisions.

• A regular mental input is the only way for improving our intelligence.

• We will never be intelligent until we start reckoning all the side effects of our decisions beforehand.

• All our fears affect our intelligence more than anything else.

• How you handle the situations are at many times more important than the issue you are trying to handle.

• Continuing the gentle questioning even after decisions for important issues will lead you to better solutions.

• Every situation can be made beneficial if we create a mindset to look only for benefits.

• Every now and then we should question whether our focus and attention is on the right thing for the moment.

• Our efficiency will be more when we focus more on the work we are doing and not on the insecurities and benefits related to the work.

• It is unwise to give too much importance to any one thing or aspect. We should be balanced in our approach.

• Most important things in life are not obvious.

• There are many nuances in life unappreciated only due to higher focus on few attractions and repulsions.

• During unexpected situations always focus on options without worrying about the problem.

• Slower response leads to better response.

• The real wealth is accumulation of knowledge, skills and intelligence.

• Numerous innovations can be achieved if we develop the habit of questioning for solutions whenever we come across even a minor hitch.

• Many small improvements in daily routine may lead to tremendous improvements in quality of life.

• When you encounter any problem reckon there are many options.

• Freedom is having many options.

• Think in terms of options and not a single solution.

• Give more importance to how you perceive any problem than to the problem itself.

• More you accept the problem, better will be your response.

• Question yourself for everything. Only questioning the thoughts and providing right inputs to the mind lead to improvements.

• Do not decide in haste. The right options take time to come.

• We should give more importance to what we do than to what we get from our actions.

• Keep correcting your priorities. Good moments and right focus are crucial aspects. Give them high priority.

• When excited postpone decisions.

• Remember your failures. They are precious.

• Always question for improvements. Do not accept any uncomfortable situation.

• There is psychological solution for all problems. Just go little deep or get some different perspective for the solution.

• While deciding, give weightage to every related aspect and try to not give too much or too little to any.

• Your attention to learning and improvements will take you to great success.

• More you feel you are intelligent the lesser the chances for improvement.

FOR HAPPINESS

• Create a flow of happiness by deciding something that will continuously make waves of happiness.

• To be always happy, we need to choose happiness over everything; for e.g. over pleasure, achievements, failures and pain.

• Happiness should not be chased. It must be the end result of your mental inputs.

• Downplay all your shortcomings and worries and express gratitude for what you have.

• Do not derive happiness from something which can change its state or something that happens once in a while. Derive happiness from something which is always there. For example, we can regularly affirm ourselves that passing of a day, passing of specific time in the day, coming closer to a new innings (next life) etcetera, give us maximum happiness.

• If we need big or difficult things to be happy, such are fewer in number than numerous smaller things, that we could develop to appreciate.

• If we try to look for goodness in everything we will definitely find a few of them. This is needed for a balanced response and a peace of mind.

• More you seek happiness the more it will be elusive.

• Your happiness should be a by-product of your mental inputs.

• Whatever can make you happy can make you unhappy if that thing can be lost. Choose wisely the thing that should make you happy.

• We should find happiness in numerous small things in life rather than depending of achievement of big things that make our nature serious.

•The only source for happiness for me is the passing of time.

• Always think that only good things will happen.

• Happiness is a decision. Choose happiness over other things at regular intervals.

FOR PEACEFULNESS

• I don't know anything.

• I do not want anything.

• I have no fears.

• All are equal.

• Everything is peaceful.

• Nothing disturbs me.

• Higher powers guide me.

• There are no uncomfortable feelings.

• All emotions and feelings are same.

• I am always contended

• I am always peaceful.

• Nothing is bad.

• Nothing can go wrong.

• I have enough of everything.

• I am intelligent enough to solve all problems.

• I have no enemies.

• Only perceptions matter.

• I can convert everything to good by perceiving it as good.

• Only good moments matter.

• Nothing else other than positive perception matters.

• I am in the right path.

• All is well.

• I am sufficient.

• Nobody is better than me.

• By regular mental inputs I can achieve everything that I can achieve.

• There is always the support I need.

• Nothing is more important than peace of mind.

• If something is affecting peace of mind postpone the thought.

• Choose peace over any attractions. All attractions have a downside.

• Happiness can be developed to be coming in a flow where as peace can be realized only for the moment. Therefore to maintain peace we need to provide the above inputs whenever we are disturbed along with the regular inputs that create a peaceful mindset.

• I can perceive everything as good if I practice right mental inputs.

• Our happiness and peacefulness depends on how we downplay what is happening outside us that are unfavorable and how we give more importance to our internal perceptions.

• What we resist will persist. Higher powers will make sure we learn to handle what we try to resist.

• Always expect based on what the other person or higher powers are likely to do for us and not based on what is advantageous for us.

However, always perceive in a way that is advantageous for us.

• Adverse situations teach us more than good situations. Therefore welcome the former.

• We react due to the wrong decisions made in the past and not due to what has happened now.

• All attachments are unreal. We never know anyone fully.

• Nothing is bad if you decide it as good.

• Expect all possible outcomes; even undesirable ones.

• Every day is the same as the differences in any two days are negligible if all perspectives are considered.

• Whatever already happened is justified. We may not know the reason behind it.

• Higher powers have different priorities and mindsets. They will not be as we expect.

• Keep saying everything is for good. You will realize the good aspects in everything later.

• Worries are due to giving too much importance to the problems than to the solutions.

• Nothing will matter after a few decades. Don’t feel bad about anything.

• Downplay all difficulties. They are as we perceive.

• Soul never dies or suffers. You are the soul.

• Everyone's mindset is different. Don’t expect anyone will behave as you expect.

• No angry, no upset, no blame, only acceptance of reality when anything happens.

• Don't take yourself too seriously. We are just a dot in this universe.

• Getting scolded by people has no affect on me because I never give it any importance.

• The pains we feel are not personal. We feel others' pain by entanglement.

• Shorter life is better for our economy.

• Shorter the life expectancy more valuable our daily life quantum.

• More the complexity in life, the more it is valuable. Disease, aging and misfortunes provide the necessary complexities in life.

• Body is illusion. You, as a soul are invincible. Perceive without ego. There is no death for the soul.

• Disease, aging and death are good. They provide necessary complexities in life.

FOR HIGHER PURPOSES

• Everything is as per the plan. Even though we have free will to make our decisions, the higher powers guide the storylines as per their plan.

• Storylines are most important. Storylines have higher purposes than individual status.

• Do not judge anyone as there may be an unknown purpose in anything.

• It’s all about choosing between satisfaction and joy in the moment or unsatisfied present moment.

• If we choose pleasure, laziness or anger now we get pain or unsatisfied moments after some time.

• Incorporate higher power's view point in our perspectives.

• Be a witness to the story instead of speculation.

• We are perfectly as planned by the higher powers. We do not have any real flaws.

• The conflicts of interest between individuals and groups make life challenging and interesting as a story. Therefore we should accept undesirable behavior and work towards bettering our response towards it.

• Our higher powers will ensure that we never have to face any difficulty that we cannot handle. If any misfortune happens which we are unable to handle, then it is either for our learning from it or for the purpose of the story line.

• Living a poor ordinary life may be very good because it is like living closer to the reality.

• Looking for benefits in all our thoughts take us farther from the reality.

• Being appreciated or being a center of attraction takes us farther from the reality.

• If something is not working out, think that higher powers have bigger plans for you.

• No one is a failure. All are playing their roles.

• No one is a celebrity. All are playing their roles.

• Downplay everything. Nothing matters in the end.

• Everything is for the purpose of a story. Therefore do not give anything undue importance.

• Perceive everything as perfect. Our experienced higher powers cannot be wrong.

• I want to just witness the proceedings. I trust the higher powers.

• Perceive that I am exactly in the situation I am meant to be.

• I cannot compare my situation with anyone. All are unique and have different roles in the story of life.

• If you have faith, treat everyone equal.

• If you have faith, no one is special.

• If you have faith, diseases are good.

• If you have faith,, no one is your enemy.

• If you have faith, you want stories not perfection.

• If you have faith, trust everything will be okay.

• If you have faith, do not fear anything.

• If you have faith, do not worry about anything.

• If you have faith, believe that he will work through you.

• Whatever happened was good to happen. Our experienced higher powers' endorsement was there in it.

• I am not sure about anything. There could be numerous plans behind anything that we come across. It’s prudent to just witness without judging anything.

• Anything can justifiably happen. At some proportion everything is justified for some positive aspect they may have.

• Everyday, we should question your goals. Do not waste time in unreal ones.

• More the hardships for us, better the story and more the drive for improvement.

FOR SPIRITUALITY AND METAPHYSICS

• There is no time in reality. Everything is a single existence. Time is like a wave in an ocean which has no permanent existence.

• There are no objects in reality. These are imaginations of a single existence.

• There is no blank space. Everything is a single existence.

• World is the imagination of the existence.

• What we see, hear, smell, taste and feel are imaginations based on changing patterns in the reality. The patterns are controlled by a part of existence.

• The whole universe is like an ocean in which time, objects and space are temporary waves.

• Nothing is personal. Everything is just happening outside.

• We are not our bodies; we are just our will which gets replaced by another body after death.

• Perceive about the true nature of reality.

• Nothing is as it appears. We can only go little closer to knowing it than before.

• Remember it is a virtual reality. Everything is possible in a virtual reality.

• We are minuscule compare to the grand scale of the universe.

• Perceive the uniform reality in everything and everyone.

• There are no differences anywhere. Everything is a uniform reality. Plain existence is witnessing an illusionary duality due to changes in its patterns.

FOR MORALITY

• All fraudsters will be caught one day. Higher powers are always watching.

• Fear of insecurity will always not allow us to be happy when we do a felony.

• It is the circumstance that makes one to start on a wrong path. It is the greed that makes one to continue on the wrong path.

• Moral life is much easier and wiser than the one with deceit.

• Being in companionship with a villain is equally risky and unwise.

• Our image once spoiled can be improved only with great difficulty. We spoil not only our reputation when we go astray, but also make our family members have their heads down with shame.

• To rectify our mistakes we need to not only stop doing the wrong but also let go of whatever we gained from them. We need to also do justice to whom we have harmed.

FOR SOCIAL BENEFITS

• Nobody is superior to me. There is more similarity than differences between people.

• Nobody is inferior to me. There is more similarity than differences between people.

• All are equal if we consider all aspects. Some have more time, some have challenging life, some have more support, some have more energy, some have better health, some have more peace, some have good relations, some will have better next life and so on.

• One of the problems with most people is that they want to feel great and consider others including their children and spouse normal. They want others to achieve great things with their help.

• Higher powers are there to support our dependents. We should try to do exactly what is our little bit that is needed for them. Entire burden is not on us. Everyone should have his individuality.

• One of the problems with most people is that they give more than necessary importance to what others think. This is nothing but self degradation. We should have our own value system as bench marks.

• One of the problems with most people is that they compare themselves with others for their own self worthiness. We should have our own unique parameters for our individual success and self worth.

• Every individual is just a speck in the grand scheme of life. Do not give undue importance to any personality. All are equal.

• One of the important problems with most people is that they want to be always appreciated. This longing creates incompleteness in our personalities. We need to realize that there is more equality between people than there are differences. Everyone has different interests and may not be interested in our achievements.

• One of the problems with most people is that when someone blames them for something they contemplate the worst and respond in magnified way, either externally or internally, due to fear and insecurity. We should first accept the blame and postpone our decisions to get more perspectives about the issue.

• Perceive your children as they are and not as you want them to be.

• Expect immaturity from children. Do not correct them. They are on their own unique path. Higher powers work with them.

• The intelligence of children is not developed. Be patient with them.

• Parents are not supposed to be perfect. It is an art to know when to accept some things, resolve some things, negotiate some things and be firm on some things based on the circumstances.

• Start ignoring small problems that others create every now and then, if resolving them takes lots of your energy. Just downplay them.

• Do not totally like someone or totally hate someone. All are between somewhat good and somewhat bad. When we think of extremes, we miss out on some important perspectives about them.

• Everyone has different circumstances and story lines. Therefore, don't try to change anyone. A gentle suggestion may be enough on your part.

• Have good feelings about everyone.

• Look to improve relations with everyone.

• Everyone is as he or she should be. Understand their circumstances.

• Correct your expectations from others.

• Expect some possible negative situations.

• It is not wise to talk exactly what we reckon is the fact. Adjusting for the side effects of our thoughts while speaking with due consideration of higher power's view is very important.

MISCELLANEOUS

• All places are the same. The difference is very small.

• Diversity in all matters is the key.

• Provide mental inputs regularly. Only this leads to improvements.

• Remember routine tasks. Maintenance is very crucial.

• Whenever mind is too busy, close your eyes and perceive that you don’t know anything.

• Our lives are unique. Do not compare with others.

• No one is actually luckier than me. All are just playing unique roles.

• Do not perceive with high intensity.

• All are unique and equal.

• Do not believe in the talking of the mind.

• Process is more important than end results

• Maximize the good moments by accepting the present moment.

• Life is always fair across many generations.

• Respect everyone.

• Empathize with downtrodden.

• Embrace humility.

• Never lose self-respect.

• We are fully worthy.

• Maintain a balance instead of maximizing on one aspect.

• Reality is just organized patterns with expressive power.

• Everything is justified at the right proportion.

• Both positive and negative aspects are needed to make it interesting and practical.

• Poor and ugly are good. They are planned by design.

• Everything is beautiful if you keep saying it.

• You are great if you keep saying it.

• You are happy if you keep saying you are happy

• You don’t need anything to be happy.

• You can always earn a living if you keep your mind fit.

• Don’t envy anyone. You can be equal to anyone by mental inputs. You are what you perceive about yourself.

• Imagine worst case scenarios with acceptance.

• Anything can happen to anybody. Embrace even misfortunes.

• Expect negative consequences also.

• Perceive negative as good if it happens.

• Whatever happened is for good.

• First accept then respond.

• Higher powers will handle it for us what we can’t.

• Everyone has different circumstances. Do not judge.

• Don’t be too sure of the causes of situations.

• We don’t actually own anything. We just use them.

• We don’t take anything when we die.

• Everyone is autonomous. Everybody is free to decide about themselves.

• Personal life is not fully personal. Higher powers are involved in between.

• Attraction to wealth is an illusion.

• Pains are only imaginations of consciousness. They are not personal. We suffer less when we reckon the pain is not for us.

• Everything becomes trivial with time.

• God has experienced all types of pain.

• You can perceive all adversities as good if we imagine them all and keep saying they are good.

• Only today is important if lived wisely.

• What happens to us is the best.

• There is always more with us than it is necessary.

• No job is menial. We are just playing a role.

• Be satisfied in the present moment every moment.

• Everything is as you perceive.

• Only your perceptions matter.

• I am sufficient. I am right for the role I am assigned in this life.

• I am a small speck in the universe and cannot make any difference to it.

• Life is just a movie. Most of it is guided by higher powers.

• Everything is temporary. Don’t give too much importance to anything.

• All achievements are subjective. Storylines are the main reason for all achievements.

• Nothing is substantial. Everything is an illusion where we can perceive everything the way we want.

• All achievements are for the story content.

• All misfortunes are for the story content.

• Everything is for the story content. Don’t be proud or sad for anything.

• Everything is perfectly imperfect. Imperfections are also planned creativity.

• Quality of perception is true wealth.

• Nothing is your problem. There are only opportunities to handle challenges.

• Higher powers guide you as they want and not as we want.

• We are not the body. Most of the activities in the body happen by the power of our creators.

• Nothing happens to you. Everything is just happening to the reality.

• We are only the witness. Our consciousness perceives everything that is happening elsewhere.

• I do not want to change anyone. Everyone is guided by their own higher powers.

• I accept the things cannot change. It’s not always about me.

• I take everything one day at a time.

• All sufferings are unreal, but I still empathize.

• There is always a scope to improve our perceptions.

• We can always change our condition by changing our perceptions.

• We are temporary and therefore insignificant.

• Our problems appear large because we give too much importance to the unreal situations.

• Challenges and misfortunes are good. Witness and enjoy the story without fear.

• Higher powers will ensure to give us difficulties only to the extent that we have the capacity to handle.

• All our worries are unreal. Focus on solutions.

• It is only when we blame we lose focus from the solutions

• Anger is never justified. We can handle things better when there is no anger and a little acceptance of wrong doings from others.

• All perfections are unreal.

• Nothing is too great. Only our ignorance makes us feel anything is great.

• No one is bad. Only circumstances make someone appear different.

• Ignore all accusations. Have righteousness based on your own mental inputs.

• What other people think of you does not matter too much if you have sound intelligence.

• Give some weightage to everything. But do not give too much weightage to a single person.

• Decisions are based on net weightage. Try to give correct weightage during perception.

• Our own defects are greater enemies than anyone else.

• Be satisfied with your situation.

• Love, happiness, desires, fears, anger, jealously et cetera are good only at very small measures. Excess of these will lead to downfall.

• Greatest gift to us is to be satisfied at most times.

• Greatest endeavor for us is to achieve continual satisfaction by regular and proper mental inputs.

• Life is a journey of many obstacles. Each obstacle is a priceless jewel.

• Look for something good in everything.

• Great hardships could be overcome by a change in perception.

• Consider life as a movie and yourself as a role.

• Everything happens for the purpose of a story.

• Repeated mental affirmations are the cures to most psychological problems.

• Most problems are psychological in nature.

• Do not win an argument at the cost of peace of mind.

• Life is like a game of chess. Even the king is moved by the higher power.

• No achievement is significant. Only perceptions matter.

• No misfortune is dreadful. Only perceptions matter.

• Improve your perceptions by right mental inputs on a regular basis.

• Give less importance to your desires, fears and achievements. They affect the intelligence and peace of mind.

• Accept all types of misfortunes by having positive attitude towards them. This will allow you to be fearless.

• Be silent and question yourself when you are not sure. Answers to most questions come very gradually.

• This world is a virtual reality. Do not glorify anything.

• When the mind is chaotic, it is only because we gave too much importance to something.

• Remember you are playing a character. It could swing any way based on the future script.

• Put yourselves in highest power's shoes and think about why and what of everything.

• You attention is most precious thing you have. Be prudent with it. Use it to enhance yourself. .

• Balance your attention points between present satisfaction and preparation for future.

• Nothing is too important in the grand scheme of things.

• Nothing is dreadful in the grand scheme of things.

• Perceive the presence of higher power's hand in everything and everyone.

• Nothing is an accident. Every accident is a planned suspense.

• Slight improvements in our ways of thinking can be a tremendous source of happiness and satisfaction.

• Minute improvements done over a long period of time will lead to unimaginable accomplishments.

• Maintain a balance between time, money, energy, effort and other resources while deciding on anything related to any one of these.

• Try to have a positive feeling about everything and everyone.

• You cannot fool everyone. Higher powers are always aware of our intentions. Just because they don't react immediately we may not presume that our acts will never create a side effect.

• Everything that we think from our will and everything that we consciously do will have some side effects. Some of them will be positive and others negative for us.

• Be aware of the side effects before talking and doing anything.

• All our problems are constraints in the game of life, without which life will not be interesting and will have less valuable.

• Understand more than you desire or fear.

• Every moment lived in satisfaction is a successful moment. Create many successful moments.

• There is something to appreciate about everything and everyone.

• Find something good and appreciate everything and everyone in your mind and not yourself alone.

• Your perceptions about everything and everyone are the reflection of your personality.

• Everything is possible at the right time and other conditions.

• All miracles are the suspense of reality.

• If we can't be successful in the eyes of the society, at least we should become successful in the eyes of our own.

• Maintain a system for managing pending jobs and plan out your work accordingly.

• All our achievements are ordinary because we can do only what is possible and higher powers help was always supporting us. Others who do not achieve have different circumstances.

• All the hurdles that we face in life are the milestones and not barricades.

• Your intelligence should be a by-product of your mental inputs.

• Your peacefulness should be a by-product of your mental inputs.

• Your psychological strength should be a by-product of your mental inputs.

• Your degrees and designation are part of your specification. You can be far greater than your specification by increasing your mental capacity.

• Your thoughts define you more than anything else.

• The source of most of the unhappiness is your past perceptions. Therefore to remain happy we need to make those past memories ineffective by inducing better memories with mental inputs.

• We can achieve unimaginable psychological strength by regular practice of right mental inputs.

• No amount of knowledge can make you great.

• There is always another option.

• Don’t be overly attached to anything.

• Accept more complain less.

• Everything is not about you.

• You are never accurate about others.

• All predictions may be faulty.

• Understand more conclude less.

• All are unique and incomparable.

• Give more importance to present moment.

• Everything is perfect at a very high level.

• Many small perspectives make it a circle with resultant force of zero.

• It’s not only about people in contact, but it is more about the higher powers.

• Be watchful about the wonderful story being created in life.

• You own nothing.

• You can lose nothing.

• There is something good in everything.

• Every moment is a winning moment.

• See beauty in the ugly.

• See richness in the poverty.

• All are guided by higher powers, so no one is in lowly position.

• Accept everyone as they are, don’t try to change anyone.

• How you deal with a situation is more important than any situation.

• Keep improving your perceptions.

• All our assumptions may be incorrect.

• Can’t compare ourselves with anyone.

• We don’t need too much luxury.

• No need to show off. Higher powers are always watching us.

• All are right in their own space.

• Ignore wherever possible.

• Others opinions about you don't matter if you are sound enough.

• Don’t overdo anything

• Have small footprint.

• Check your energy level often before doing something.

• Have self-respect and sense of freedom.

• Live more accumulate less.

• Give others the right to their choices.

• Improve your perceptions about the world. Reality is neither good nor bad.

• Attention to higher powers often helps in deciding.

• Higher powers plan most of the stuffs.

• Anything can happen. All possibilities exist.

• Question your reasoning.

• Look for small improvements in everything.

• Look for some depth and width in all your understandings.

• Don't look for limelight.

• Be genuine.

• Lower the intensity of your perceptions.

• Challenges and misfortunes are part of the game of life.

• Be more selfless.

• Don't become proud.

• Check for higher powers' view.

• Be as humble as possible.

• Consider relationships before talking.

• Don’t remain angry or upset for more than 1 min.

• Have gratitude for all you have.

• Always consider others’ perspectives.

• No one is perfect as you may perceive; they are perfectly imperfect.

• Treat everyone equally.

• Look from Higher powers view.

• Everything is somewhat justified.

• Be fearless. Work towards fearlessness.

• Ignore and downplay all worries.

• There are conflicts of interests. Respect it.

• There are differing mindsets. Respect it.

• Understand your circumstances.

• Accept all possibilities, which always exist

• Everything is justified when it happens.

• Look for peace from inside.

• Look from many angles.

• Problems are good. They lead to solutions.

• Downfalls are good learning opportunities.

• Everything is as it should be.

• Everything is beautiful.

• Feel self sufficient even when you have nothing.

• Perceive everything as equal.

• We are in limited time frame.

• Respect people involved first.

• Have considerations before conclusions.

• Body is an imagination. It has no life.

• You do not die; you just change your circumstances with rebirth.

• Be conscious of higher powers.

• For god everyone is equally good and important.

• You are what you perceive.

• Perceive to your advantage.

• You rise through your problems.

• More the problems, the steeper the rise.

• Don’t do anything in anger.

• Do everything with a sense of respect for others.

• Don’t trust the stories of the mind.

• Don’t look down on anybody.

• Don’t bow down to anybody.

• Ignore the not so good.

• Don’t expect returns for your deeds.

• God will ultimately provide what you deserve.

• Develop a questioning mindset.

• Develop a trying out or research mindset.

• Develop a no-angry mindset.

• Develop a no-blame mindset.

• Consider you may be at fault when unpleasant situations arise.

• Let see how it goes mindset.

• Develop people-first mindset.

• Develop continuous-improvements mindset.

• Do not panic for anything.

• Accept there will be lots of unknown.

• Being sad is not a problem. Not accepting sadness may be an issue.

• Life can’t be linear for everyone.

• Expect ups and downs.

• Reality is something different than what we perceive.

• You learn through failures.

• Look for acceptance.

• Look for better perspectives.

• Develop a forgiving mindset.

• Develop an equality mindset.

• If someone gets enlightened, it is because of his role. There is nothing personal about it.

• If someone becomes a celebrity, it is because of his role. There is nothing personal about it.

• If I become a beggar, it is because of my role. I can still learn to perceive that I am the best.

• We can feel good about ourselves even in the most pathetic situation, if we prepare for those situations. Our incorrect perceptions affect us more than the apparent pathetic situation.

• Don't perceive that those who got more marks than you in school are better off than you. If you perceive you are better off then you are better off. After all by practicing mental inputs you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• Don't perceive that those who got better career than you are better off than you. If you perceive you are better off then you are better off. After all you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• Don't perceive that those who got more money than you are better off than you. If you perceive you are better off then you are better off. After all you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• Don't perceive that those who got better health than you are better off than you. If you perceive you are better off then you are better off. After all you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• Don't perceive that those who got longer life than you are better off than you. If you perceive you are better off then you are better off. After all you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• Practice is the key to achieve most skills. Don't give up easily on a good endeavor after getting an opportunity.

• Feel supreme after studying this book. After all you learnt how to manage your perceptions, which most people don't know.

• We can get rid of bad habits and addictions by repeatedly thinking and talking about the bad effects of those habits.

• Everyone is important to the economy in one way or another. It's our incorrect mindset that gives the opposite notion.

• Having good mindsets and not having wrong mindsets are bigger assets than having lots of gold.

• Keep doing something regularly so that you get the accrued benefits. Most types of work, if carried out regularly with an attention to improvements, will get you the skills needed to be successful in life.

• Intelligence only helps in improving the skills. But they are the skills that improve the quality of life. Therefore, along with mental inputs we need to have something to work on regularly.

• Whenever someone did something that affects us there are three options. The options are blaming the person, accepting the situation and finding a solution. The best sequence of doing the above is to first accept, then find solution and finally consider responding after finding the reason for their act.

• Very often, it is the previous solutions to similar problems that become habits and become hurdles for further improvements.

• It is the stress due to perception of failure that is one of the major reasons for lack of innovations. People who need to innovate should be stress free. Motivation for such people is acceptance of failure rather than motivation for success.

• Feeling good about yourself and the environment, which is in your hand, help in maximizing good moments.

• Trying to change others, when they are not in control, will lead to disappointments for both parties.

• Trying to control everything has more undesirable side effects than anything that can go wrong in the long run.

• Behave with everyone how you want everyone to behave with you. This is better and less risky option than taking advantage of your position, which may change any time.

• It is always better to have a balance of various aspects rather than maximizing on one aspect. For example money, effort, time, risk, brand value, self-worth, cash flow, security etc. when negotiating a deal. Don't just go by the deal value.

• Many problems don't get solved because we do not treat them as a problem and don’t give them due importance. Any situation that could lead to even a slight discomfort to anyone should be treated as a solvable case study.

• Great improvements in intelligence can be achieved if we consciously question and improve our thought process.

• Everything that happens has both negative and positive aspects. For some occurrences positive aspects are not obvious and for others negative aspects are not obvious. To remain happy we need to explore the positive aspects of everything.

• There are many failures happening in our lives that go unnoticed. A presence of mind and a bit of questioning may help us find them.

• The greatness of your life can be judged by the number of times you have faced unexpected situations.

• All aspects of life are equally important. We should spend some time thinking about all aspects and get familiarized with them.

• Our life will get imbalanced if we give too much importance to only few aspects of it. Life is not about only achieving something. It is more about understanding, learning and experiencing.

• Successes and failures are both equally important. One is the work in progress and the other the end result.

• Life is not about only accumulating resources. It is more about managing with limited resources.

• All discomforts are errors in perceptions and all pains are unavoidable sensations needed for the design of the life in the universe.

• We are never accurate about our perceptions. We can only get some steps closer to the reality.

•You are closest to the reality when you feel that you know nothing.

• Being very intelligent also has side effects. Some people may be affected due to our intelligence when there are conflicts of interest.

• Even if you are very good some people can be justifiably upset with you due to conflict of interests.

• Even if your product is very good you may not be able to be successful if there is conflict of interest with higher powers.

• Even if you are the best in the field you may fail if there is major conflict of interest with higher powers.

• Everything that we perceive is superficial and unreal. They appear real due to the importance we give to our perceptions.

• If the difficulty level in life is increasing, it means that you are progressing to higher grades in life.

• If you have enough freedom then everything else is secondary.

• Change your perspective from I am happy because I this is so good to I am happy because I want to be happy.

• Two of the important aspects that should be included in our decision making are freedom and good moments.

• In the order of importance we need first freedom, then good moments, then health, then knowledge, then intelligence and then finally wealth.

• If we focus only on the solutions, the problems will cease to be burdens.

• Don’t get disheartened if you fail to get the right perceptions while doing the mental inputs. Any failure in perception only means that more time is needed to make the old perceptions ineffective.

• Keep doing the mental inputs a couple of times every day initially for a month and weekly once thereafter.

• All that I reckon is bad for me are actually good for me. Difficulties are for the strong and support is for the week.

• When anything bad happens to us, if the priority for acceptance, peace and questioning for causes and solutions is more than any negative consequence then we are in the path of great progress.

• We have the capacity to laugh even when anything very gruesome happens to us.

• The worst thing that can happen to me could be the best thing that could happen to me.

• It only matters if you give importance. Nothing matters if you could ignore everything.

• Even deadliest of diseases are just imaginations of the soul. If you could consider it as trivial then it is trivial.

• No one is your relative and no one is a stranger. All are same.

• It does not matter whether someone has harmed us purposefully or unintentionally. We need to just face it or find solution.

• Even if anything worst has happened we should reckon that it has happened with the higher power's endorsement. So face it and find a remedy.

• There is no difference between living in a bungalow or as a beggar in the street because it is a virtual reality.

• The real nature of poisonous and salubrious substances is same. They just behave differently due to their different purposes by the discretion of reality.

• The blood, germs, bacteria, virus and infection etcetera are in the basic nature the same. They just behave differently due to their different purposes by the discretion of reality.

• Each one of us is configured differently for different purposes. All purposes are noble.

• Everyone is doing exactly as he is supposed to be as per their purposes.

• Pain, stress, anxiety, worry, depression etcetera are dramatic because we are not accustomed to them and therefore give too much importance to them.

• If we reckon something as great it is because we perceive it as great. If we reckon something as dreadful it is because we perceive it as dreadful. Everything is commonplace if we are accustomed to it or realize their true nature.

• We are closer to reality when we realize that there is no difference between any two people.

• Our perceptions about people, places, things, events etcetera are never accurate. The perceptions are shaded by the lens of our mindsets.

• We do not need super powers to feel great about ourselves. We are great if we simply perceive ourselves as great.

• No one is week because everyone has the support of the higher powers. People may appear week due to their role of being in a menial position.

• Nothing is personal. Everything is just existence in reality.

• If someone is a fool it is because of his configuration to make him suitable for the role in the storyline.

• No achievement is great because all achievements happen due to the circumstances.

• I welcome all types of problems in my life. Providing difficult situations to me are in higher powers' domain where as facing them and finding solutions to the situations are in my domain.

• The greater my capacity to handle difficulties, the more challenging the problems provided to me.

• If you are psychologically rich you do not mind losing out a lot where as if you are psychologically poor you want to win every time.
• We should allow others to have a win over you if you have the wealth of higher powers' support.

• Life for most people is all about handling difficulties. The pleasures in life are not sustainable. Only finding solutions to the difficulties are sustainable.

• I prepare myself to facing all types of problems by imagining them with acceptance, getting accustomed to them and questioning the mind for both external and internal solutions.

• When I try to find solutions to the problems, some of the solutions have some problems, for which I find solution, which also have some problems, for which I again find solutions and so on. I try to find solutions at multiple levels till I find a satisfactory and concluding solution.

• I do my job not for any personal achievement but for service to the society. No amount of wealth will give me satisfaction. Small improvements in my thinking and daily routine is all that I look for.

• I just keep perceiving happiness and contentment by suggesting and affirming happiness and contentment without any reason.

• Whenever I do a favor for anybody, I do not expect anything in return. I just empathize and do freely wherever possible without exerting too much and also trying to have a very small footprint.

• I will be slow and steady with my thoughts, decisions and actions and not rush through anything. To explore various aspects of life in a slow and steady pace is my purpose in life. I do not have any competition.

• I try to align myself with the higher powers wherever possible and try my best to know their outlook.

• I cherish the path in the journey of life and do not look for any achievement. Knowing new perspectives and understanding life a little better is all I look forward to in this life.

• The best way to understand this life is to keep questioning to understand the outlook of our creators.

• Trying to be fearless with proper reasoning, faith in the system and preparing for the risks both internally and externally is the most rewarding endeavor. There is freedom only without fear and without freedom there is nothing worthwhile.

• Expect and be ready to face all types of difficulties that are possible to come to you.

• Whenever we got into a big misfortune or we got a big fortune we should not look into them in isolation but look for other fortunes or misfortunes that are usually compensated for by our higher powers.

• Practice to feel sad when things go right and feel happy when things go bad.

• Practice to feel week when you are energetic and feel energetic when you are tired.

• Every now and then think that what is coming in the mind is incorrect. Try to recognize the automatic ramblings of the mind and stop adding fuel to it.

• Embrace uncertainty, expect unpredictability and look forward to the unknown.

• Wish for everything to happen as per higher powers' likings. Don't have your own expectations. Be okay with anything that happens.

• You can never know anybody’s circumstances fully. Therefore never be too sure to judge anyone. Just be slightly inclined towards one way or another for based on what you reckon.

• The perceptions of pain, diseases, aging and death that I may experience in life are my own imaginations based on the suggestion of my own counterpart.

• I am quite all right and can do my work efficiently. Whatever mental inhibitions are there are illusionary hurdles which I will overcome with ease.

• The most difficult thing is to understand the perspectives and plan of the hierarchy of higher powers and try to balance them with our needs to sail through smoothly.

• One of the major flaws in our thinking and decision-making is that when we reckon some perspective about an issue we tend to ignore some other perspectives about the issue. We should develop the habit to reckon more perspectives and gauge the net effect of those perspectives.

• The best way to make a decision is to question for more and more perspectives relating to the issue and aggregate them according their priorities and the options available.

• One of the major flaws in our thinking and decision-making is that we conclude too early even when we have more time available with us to get a clear picture of the issue we are concluding about.

• When we realize the higher powers' perspectives, nature of our reality and the workings of the mind, we are at absolute ease with ourselves at all times.

• The world may see me whatever way they want, but what matters is how I see myself.

• My defects are the reasons for the chance for my learning and enhancements. Without something to improve upon I will never have a feel of getting better.

• Higher powers are always working in our lives for higher purposes in life, which actually works in our favor, although many of their plans may cause some feelings of discomfort.

• Even though my say is very little compared to the higher powers, my small initiatives when carried out over a period of time will make unimaginable progress.

• One of the most important indicators for improvements in intelligence is when we get more and more perspectives and options in the thinking process without concluding at the first instant.

• Whenever someone says something the first thought should be of acceptance. After considering all aspects we should reconsider the issue.

• We have a say of only about one percent in most matters. However, to express that one percent we should have hundred percent dedication.

• Logic is more powerful than power itself although it often appears that the power rules the world.

• It is really lucky to be fearless. We can maximize good moments only when we are fearless of anything that could happen to us.

• Any problem will cease to be a problem is it is possible to ignore it or bear with it or find a solution for it.

• At one point only one perspective can be perceived. Therefore we should make it an habit to enquire for more perspectives in a gentle manner, one after the other.

• Life is uniform everywhere. Any difference observed anywhere is an illusion.

• The basic nature of us and our creator is the same. The difference is only in knowledge, experience and privilege.

• Every thought or action is a play of drama. We should not give too much importance to it after it is done.

• Nothing can go wrong if you think everything is right.

• Everything that we perceive is a temporary wave. Both the good as well as bad perceptions don't last. They all merge with the ocean.

• We cannot judge anyone for their reactions towards us because we never know when the reaction is due to higher power's plan and when it is the reaction from the person. We need to apply patience to safeguard our relationship.

• Nothing is serious enough to panic in life. Everything is as it should be for the moment. The highest power is always in control. Everything will happen as per the plan.

• Life is all about avoiding some problems, accepting some problems and finding solutions to some problems. We should expect the coming of all types of problems and find ways to deal with them because problems are fundamental to our growth.

• Being still and not affected by the storm is the first step for dealing with negative situations. A calm head will lead to the best responses.

• At any given moment all possibilities exist. You never know what the future plan is or twist in your story. Welcome anything that may happen.

• The present moment is the most important gift that you can ever have. Do not miss it in searching of something, suffering for what happened in the past or fearing of something that may happen in the future.

• To make right decisions that have long term benefits we need to have right priorities for important aspects of life. For example humanity is more important than our country, which is more important than our city, which is more important than our locality, which is more important than us.

• We should look for goodness in all types of situations to alleviate the negative impact of those situations. All the precious aspects are usually hidden inside usually rejected aspects.

• Small steps taken towards improvements will lead to giant progress in life. We should remember our goals and take small steps towards them regularly.

• Anger and sadness rob us from the precious moments which could be used to experience better perceptions about this world.

• Anger and sadness are never justified. Whenever we feel angry or sad we should realize that we need to work towards the goal of minimizing negative feelings.

• There is no saturation point in improving our intelligence. We should regularly provide some time to provide proper inputs to our mind and also cultivate the habit of questioning for improvements and new ideas.

• A satisfied and complete individual will never show off his strengths to others. We should not take undue advantage of our knowledge and try to have a small footprint.

• We should be responsible for the roles we are playing. Our commitment should be for ourselves and not to show to the world.

• A peaceful and well balanced life is better than a life of limelight and power. All attractions have a downside which we will realize later.

• We are only intelligent to the extent we provide mental inputs and question ourselves.

• All that matters is how we are feeling at the present moments and nothing matters at the end.

• Anything that we perceive either as good or bad is only an illusion. The reality is neither good nor bad. It just exists without any taste.

• We should consider people who are less intelligent as interesting ones. There is hidden creativity in the design of the world, which is not perceived due to our incorrect mindsets.

• We are as rich or poor as we perceive to be and not how much money we have.

• The only thing that prevents us from our progress in the spiritual perspective is that we hold on to our attachments to the worldly realm.

• Every day is like a blank page. We can write anything we like. If we perceive what we write as good we will feel good. Therefore, choose wisely what you write and think wisely about what you write.

• If we perceive there is competition there is competition. If we perceive there is cooperation there is cooperation. You can convert competition into cooperation and vice-versa by your way of perceptions.

• We should consider the smallest of problems as opportunity for finding solutions. If we consider anything as solvable problem, then the solution will come by.

• We should give equal importance to all people and try to not hurt them. Deal with other people doing mistakes in the same way as how you would deal if your loved ones did the same mistake.

• We should always remember Gandhiji's words that we should work as if we are going to die tomorrow and learn as if we will live forever.

• You can't be winning all the time. If you are winning all the time it would mean you have not been tested enough.

• When you are not in good mood accept it and tell the other person you are not feeling good and need some time to get back to you. Bad moods are often due to some misunderstanding which needs some time to be understood and corrected.

• We expect things to happen based on what has happened in the past or based on our desires and fears. However, things happen based on the plans of various higher powers. Therefore, anything can happen at any time to anybody.

• We should always consider we may be wrong and question how we may be wrong before taking some action on important issues.

• We get more revelations when in trouble than when everything is happening alright. Keep questioning yourself for insights.

• Don’t consider anyone as weak. God's grace can fall upon anybody at any time.

• We are closer to reality when we feel humble than when we feel otherwise. There are more things lacking in us than we have.

• The best state of being is to be in a state of witness to whatever that is happening without and judgment.

• We should be in the same way when we are alone or with someone. Our higher powers, who matter the most are always watching us.

• Considering any one as lower or higher than ourselves are both great injustices. We should put efforts to reduce the gaps in our perceptions to get closer to the reality.

• We should perceive the design of our higher powers in everyone and appreciate the ingenuity in each one of them.

• Having a balance of all aspects of life is better than getting attracted to one or two aspects and not understanding and experiencing the important facets of life.

• We should not just look for what is attractive to the eyes or ears but understand what the whole picture is conveying to us from inside to outside.

• We should not be too fast in deciding about important matters of life. Our first instincts may not be the right ones. We should take some time and write down the pros and cons of related aspects and do analysis of the issues.

• Our decisions will be more and more accurate when we consider more and more aspects related to the issue and give right priorities to the individual aspects.

• Every now and then we should ask ourselves what are the problems that we are encountering and then think of possible solutions for each problem one by one.

• If we have the right level of self worthiness then we will not be affected by anyone's accusations or yelling. We can just take the kind of message that works for us and do the needful whenever someone is accusing or yelling at us.

• Habits are very important when we need to make quick decisions. We can make good habits by repeatedly thinking about our best practices.

• Many of the times our mistakes can be corrected immediately. However, due to focus on the loss due to the mistake or for some other reason we do not make an attempt to rectify it.

• We should always reckon that some things are pending in important tasks. If we are too confident of completion when even a minor portion is incomplete we may miss out on completing the task.

• Due to fear of loss due to failure we do not try out many small things in life. We should have a researching mindset and wherever possible we should try out new things.

• We can experience the same type of feelings experienced by the rich even if we have fewer comforts by learning to perceive better.

• Whenever we try to achieve something we do it at the cost of achieving something else. Therefore, we should be aware of the most important aspect like understanding everything or try to decide on few important aspects and try to balance those aspects.

• Our life depends both on higher powers' decisions as well as our own decisions. Therefore, it is important to know how our higher powers make their decisions and balance our choices and priorities with higher powers' perspectives

• If we focus only on the solutions the problems will cease to be burdens. When we tend to give our attention to the damage created by the problems or to the persons who are the cause of the problems we lose the opportunity to find the solutions.

• Even the worst that could happen to us is just an experience. We will never know the valve of the experience until it is put to use and produces the result.

• The worst enemy for progress is the fear of failure or fear of anything for that matter. When the attention is on the fear we cannot have the attention on the solutions.

• People who have very high standards of living are actually living farther than reality. Therefore, in the eyes of the highest power the ones who have ground level problems have higher quality of life due to their being closer to reality. Only due to the ignorance of the perceiver and the scarcity mentality, any person who has a lavish lifestyle may appear great. The lavish lifestyle is an illusion and serves the purpose of only of a role in a story.

SUMMARY

Some of the important concepts that we have learnt in this book are as follows:

Our primary goal should be to improve our intelligence. All other goals can be achieved easily if we have enough intelligence.

When we talk of intelligence, it is actually applying the logic and priority on the knowledge possessed by us by means of questioning and deciding about the course of action to be taken. Therefore, two things become important in developing the intelligence. They are the knowledge base and the questioning.

We need to differentiate between the thoughts initiated by our wills and the automatic thoughts of the mind.

Our mind makes decisions based on the priorities of various aspects life as computed from a long list of previous perceptions of around a few years. Since the mind uses a cumulative value, making one time suggestion regarding any correction will not be effective. To make an effective change in our perceptions and decisions we need to make the suggestions numerous times such that previous incorrect perceptions are no more in the list of contention.

The higher purpose in creation of the universe is creativity and that of its continuation is interesting stories. Therefore, we should consider our lives as a role in the story of life and live up in conducting our roles in a creative way.

This universe is an all-pervading single life entity which can change patterns and become conscious of various types of life expressions that are formed in its various parts due to changing patterns. Therefore, we should see equality in everything as there is more uniformity everywhere than there are differences.

Disease, aging and death affect us all because we do not prepare for those. It is our perception about these that affect us more than the pain. By regular imagination of all types of diseases and their complications with the perception of goodness about them we can make these situations more familiar and natural for us.

We all have many defects of character, due to which our intelligence is skewed. We need to identify those defects and address them one by one by means of regular practice of right mental inputs.

Happiness is fleeting because we give more importance to other things than to be happy with the mindset that those things made us happy. Therefore, when those things are missing or threatened to be missing we become unhappy. When we make regular affirmations that to be happier is more important than getting so and so thing or anything that we may want, then we start becoming happier. Affirmations that some permanent aspect like passing of time, is the biggest source of happiness could even help in our endeavour to remain happy.

We can perceive everything the way we want by practicing to provide right inputs to our minds. Therefore, it makes sense to learn to perceive in a way that is advantageous to us instead of perceiving in the default way of the mind.

All the problematic issues that we face are there for us for our understanding, experiencing, finding solutions and for the higher purposes of creating interesting stories.

We need to understand and realize that we are all made different and to serve different purposes. If everyone is in his peak of achievement at all times than the world will be boring. Another thing to understand is that it is not the failure that affects us. It is our perception that affects us.

Regular practice of providing suitable mental inputs is the means to be happy, peaceful, contended and intelligent. These aspects are the real ingredients for success.

People who have very high standards of living are actually living farther than reality. Therefore, in the eyes of the highest power the ones who have ground level problems have higher quality of life due to their being closer to reality. Only due to the ignorance of the perceiver and the scarcity mentality, any person who has a lavish lifestyle may appear great. The lavish lifestyle is an illusion and serves the purpose of only of a role in a story.

CONCLUSION

We are actually what we decide, because everything that we see is an illusion and only how we perceive in this illusion becomes our reality. If we believe that all are equal with different roles and there is no difference between the rich and the poor, good-looking and the ugly, knowledgeable and ignorant, then our mind will reason out how these are true and slowly we will start realizing oneness with everything. Our mind guesses the information not available with us and such guesses are the reason that we veer away from the reality. All our difficulties and problems are for the purposes of learning opportunities for us and for creating interesting stories for the observer. If one says he is beautiful every day he will start perceiving himself as beautiful after few weeks. If one says she is very rich everyday she will feel rich after few weeks. If one says he is very intelligent everyday he will start becoming more and more intelligent after few weeks. These are the commands that take time to be acted on but surely work if there are no noises in the mind.

After studying the book hope you can say for yourself the following statements. Nevertheless, we may consider these as the concluding affirmations. However, without studying the book for some time just chanting these affirmations will not work. After doing the hard work of regular mental inputs for a few months, we may try to develop mindsets from these affirmations.

1. I am very lucky and everything happening is good.
2. I am self improving.
3. There is nothing personal about me. Everything that happens is just happening as per the universal plan. Therefore my worries, insecurities, pain, challenges and misfortunes are not personal but expression of the stories conceptualized by the universal soul.

4. I realize that each one of us is a uniform soul and this world is the imagination of the souls. Therefore each one of us is equal with different roles and unique circumstances.
5. I am the soul that never dies.
6. I know I can always be wrong. To remain humble, I will often close my eyes and say with conviction and acceptance, "I don't know anything".
7. I will regularly be conscious of my incoming thoughts and interact with them with validation, instead of accepting it impulsively.

Hope you find this book very useful and help you to achieve the transformation you are looking for.